

'Peace Of Soul' - - - By Monsignor Fulton Sheen

This is the tenth of fourteen installments of 'Peace of Soul'... By MONSIGNOR FULTON J. SHEEN

The denial of guilt or the effort to reduce ethics to psychiatry is as unsound and unscientific as the error of denying that there are genuinely mental troubles...

Even when a client has his psychoanalyst's encouragement to laugh off the possibility of moral evil or a sense of guilt as the cause of his worries...

Cure is conditioned upon the realization of two basic facts: there is some evil in the soul; and the perfection and cure are not to be sought in the person himself...

Escapists refuse to face the fact that their own lives are disordered; or else they try an "easy" way out of their misery...

Some of the "easy" ways out are the escapism of scandalizing, which seeks to find others who are worse than the self...

Escapism never succeeds. In every sinner whose struggles and resources are due to a burdened conscience, there is a latent contradiction...

The real escapist follows many different "paths" but none of them are humble enough to admit that there is some evil in them!

ident moral energy to be had or to be good; they have not enough religion to find true peace of soul...

But there are some men and women who, admitting their sins and faults, are still unhappy. Where there is a genuine sense of guilt, release can come only from Divine Mercy...

Unless we are ready to ask for the forgiveness of our sins by God, the examination of conscience may be only a vain form of introspection...

For the sinner to be made well, his confession and sorrow must have in it an appeal to God's mercy to distinguish it from remorse.

Chapter Twenty Since the Christian is trying to do something very difficult in applying to follow Our Lord's precepts...

But since those who persecute religion as a form of escapism must constantly think about God and His Church, it follows that they are often closer to conversion...

of the penitent. Faith in Christ's merits alone is not adequate for the remission of sins...

The Church gives her penitents a fresh start. And the Church has a tremendous spiritual capital, gained through centuries of penance, persecution and martyrdom...

They discover that for years there have been dozens, in some instances hundreds, of souls praying especially for them, storming heaven with the plea that a little act of humility by the convert might open a crack in his armor...

Why are there monasteries and convents? Why do so many young souls leave the lights and glamor of the world for the shades and shadows of the Cross where saints are made?

The modern world so little understands their mission that, as soon as a newspaperman hears of a handsome young woman entering a cloister...

Penance is a recognized fact, rather to pretend that it does not exist is morbid. The past will affect our future...

There are three general ways of doing penance: prayers, alms, and fasting. In prayer, we beg God's mercy on our souls...
