College Girls Show Interest In Catholic Church

Ithaca — An "intense interest in things Catholic" was revealed by students of Wells College, a non-Catholic women's college in Aurora, at a series of lectures he gave there recently according to the Rev. Donald M. Cleary, chaplain of the Cornell University Newman Club.

"The questions asked by the girls," Father Cleary declared, "were very fair — showing an interest in things Catholic, a desire for knowledge and at times a vast misconception about things Catholic both historically, doctrinally and from the viewpoint of Catholic prejudice."

Father Cleary gave a two-day series of five lectures on the nature and importance of religion, the position of the Papacy in world affairs, basic Catholic doctrine, the Liturgy and the Catholic philosophy of education. There times, he said, the question and answer period after his talks had to be halted at a two-hour deadline.

"In my opinion," the priest commented, "the whole experience could easily be used as a pattern in other colleges, rather than bringing in three men (of the major faiths) at one time and having the discussion degenerate into a pointless exposition."
