Sullivan it any more. This may be a little late to be saying anything about putting on the sackcloth and ashes for Advent. However. since we're all probably in the same "meant-well-but" boat, it still isn't too late to pick up the broken fragments of those noble resolutions and begin again. Or, if there are any of us who've been in a coma for the last three weeks and don't know that the "d" in Advent stands for denial, then there's just one week left in which to work on our bodies so they'll look emac-

When Christ came down to earth on the first Christmas night, He didn't have a thing. He was the essence of nelf-denial. His Mother didn't have anything either, not even clothes for her Baby. And cerminly St. Joseph wasn't rolling a luxury. The shepherds were poor. And we too have to give up lots of little things if we want to feel at home at the stable on Christmas eve.

Let's not get the idea that it's going to be easy to swear off something for a week. It's hard even for just a day. That's why despite our good intentions, it's usually a "make 'em and break em" proposition. But this time we've just got to slick to it and hold the candy or cokes off with
