Knit Family Ties This Summer

By MARY LENNON BRYDER

President, Diocesan Council of Catholic Women

"We must not forget that the making of a home in which all feel at ease and happy, and the bringing up of children are very special contributions to the common welfare."

Some suggestions along this line would include consideration of one's neighbor by exchange of morning play supervision of the little ones. Then when the heat of the summer strikes a prolonged active sports are discouraged by medical authorities a "quiet, busy time" could be used to make Catholic book marks for future gifts and the assembling of scrap books out of old Christmas cards and holy cards.

Lord when He was a little boy. The interest in Catholic literature should not be restricted to the children. In shady awns or cool porch mothers of the neighborhood could have many an interesting discussion based on magazine articles of interest to Catholics.

WHAT'S DOING AT THE DALY'S

Rules Were Made To Be Broken

By MARY TINGLEY DALY

By MARY TINGLEY DALY

It's so easy to make rules and regulations and so hard to enforce them. Trouble is you make the rules and regulations with your head greatest good in the great - number and make the punishment fit the crime. Then comes the enforcing and the human element enters the picture.

blazer with BLESSED SACRAMENT across the back of it. Well, maybe Pat would be home in time and would tumble I didn't say so and neither did Eileen, but we were both secretly hoping.

Like the rule at our house that when anybody leaves a garment where it is not supposed to be that garment is confiscated it is hung in our closet for a week with a paper pinned on it stating the date when the owner may reclaim it.

born blew outside. "Doesn't she?" Pat looked up from the records. "Why the blazer?" She laughed. "What you trying to prove?"

BECAUSE OF the rain Pat and her date did come in early - came in and played records. As a rule maker I couldn't suggest the loan of Pat's white topper. Eileen wouldn't ask and Pat was unconscious of what was going on.

"Sure wish I'd hung up that topper," Eileen sighed. "This blazer looks kinda funny and with all those new kids." Pat was leaning over, examining a pile of records, as Eileen went through the living room blazer and party dress and all Eileen's going to the young people's party. I said hopefully "Have fun, kid," Pat said without looking up.

"You look nice, Eileen," I said with a last frantic hope as the
