A LOOK AT LABOR

Pinks Still Color Segments Of Labor

This dispute poses for all friends of organized labor a 364 question. Now that the Communists are out of the labor picture, will their places be taken by vocal but disheveled Marxist Socialists, who for the moment happen to be anti-Communist?...

The American labor movement badly needs a philosophy. The days of Samuel Gompers are gone and with them have been buried the business unionism of the early 20th century... AS LONG AS the controlling figures in American labor have some roots in the Christian tradition, as long as there are Murphys, Greens, Meany's, Rieves, etc. we may feel certain that the trade union movement will disavow class warfare, political strikes, anti-religion, and all the other social diseases usually associated with socialism... While many members of the Socialist Party in the United States have well-deserved reputations as honest, hard-working and competent trade unionists, there is a danger the end of Communist influence in the trade union movement will bring with it a resurgence of doctrinaire socialism... It is incumbent upon the leaders of organized labor to see that the European conflict between Christians and Socialists does not happen here. As men forgot God, they substituted loyalty to country in the stead. Now they have shrunk; they love only their own political party. THE TOP OF MY MIND Sparks from a Fiercer Flame

By Gretta Palmer

A former Communist Party member, now a Catholic, explained lately and privately that there is less of a sense of deep and enduring friendship within the Church than within the Party... THE ANSWER to both questions may be less of a reproach to modern Catholics than it at first appears. The Communists do not always act in their generous dealings with each other, from motives of brotherly affection... "If I appeared, in trouble, on the doorstep of a prominent Catholic family and said, 'Take me in. I am a Catholic, too,' how warm a welcome would I receive? Is mere membership in the Mystical Body accepted, today, as a bond requiring generosity and kindness from all of us to all of us? You know it isn't, and so do I. But why isn't it?"... Or take again, a member of Alcoholics Anonymous who lately said, "I have learned how to practice Catholicism, in its aspect of charity, from the A.A.'s far more than from fellow-Catholics. When any A.A. is in need, at any hour of any night, the rest of us are at his service. And why is that not true in the Church?"... There are times when welcoming the stranger in distress is a task we must perform, from love of Christ. But there are other times when supernatural presence tells us to do a different thing... To deny help to those in distress is certainly not the plea this article is trying to make; we, if we are really living Catholic lives, will do more acts of charity than hundreds of Communists and dozens of humanitarians... But such acts are merely sparks from a far fiercer flame. And no man's Catholicism should be judged by the standards of a world that tends to think in horizontal terms of merely human goodness. For a Catholic, love is always vertical... But such acts are merely sparks from a far fiercer flame.
