First Camden Diocesan Paper Comes Out Aided By Courier Printers, Staff

By THOMAS H. O'CONNOR

The newest Catholic diocesan newspaper — the Star Herald of Camden, New Jersey diocese, rolled off the same presses last week as did this diocesan paper, the Courier Journal, now in its 42nd year.

Launching of a diocesan paper in this day of newsprint shortage, high operation costs, and in a diocese but 13 years old, was a task that required and received the pioneer spirit of those who started papers in the days of handcart delivery.

To the writer in his 28th year in the Catholic press field, it was an operation as satisfying to behold as for an oldtime sports figure to watch his old team win a game.

THE PAPER for the Camden diocese was an objective of His Excellency, Most Rev. Bartholomew J. Eustace, from the time in 1937 that he took over the diocese. He appointed the Rt. Rev. Joseph B. McIntyre, former chancellor and pastor of Christ the King parish, Haddonfield, managing editor.

Contacts were made with various printing firms in New Jersey and Pennsylvania and with national chain newspaper organizations with the view of starting a paper. After much deliberation the Camden officials closed with the Rochester organization because of newsprint available and a setup suitable for getting out the weekly newspaper.

Response in the New Jersey diocese was unprecedented in the beginning of a diocesan paper. Bishop, priests, people and advertisers cooperated to send into the Christopher Press, 35 Scio St., printers of the Courier Journal, more than 17,000 subscriptions and enough advertising for 20 pages.

Cooperating with Msgr. McIntyre, the Very Rev. Msgr. John S. Randall, managing editor of the Courier Journal and Martin Q. Moll, president of Christopher Press, placed both their staffs in full operation to turn out the new paper.

ARTHUR P. FARREN of the Courier Journal staff handled the deluge of advertising and news and Elmer G. Grapensteter, circulation manager, rallied Nazareth College girls and members of the Rochester Post Office staff to get the subscriptions in shape.

Typesetters, hand composition men, stereotypers, pressmen and mailers, worked zealously and long after hours with the same spirit of turning out a paper that the oldtimers remember when the mechanical facilities were not so streamlined.

The heavy flow of copy through the composing room for two diocesan newspapers and several other weekly publications was directed by veteran George Uhl, foreman.

MAKING HISTORY, the Rev. Patrick J. Flynn, editor of the Catholic Courier Journal, laid out the front page which was well received in Camden. The entire paper over which Farren worked throughout day and night hours won a warm endorsement from His Excellency Bishop Eustace.

Monsignor McIntyre was on hand to help at this end in handling the Camden copy and was most appreciative of the job done in the Rochester plant.

The new paper is again in process of coming out this week. It will now begin the steady grind of turning out news and views for the Catholic people of Camden. The writer hopes for it the steady growth of a healthy infant, and continued success in growth through the years ahead.
