'My Son John' New McCarey Film . . . Ex-Red Dmytryk Hired

It could happen to you or me. That is one idea behind Leo McCarey's shaping film, "My Son John," which some have wrongly hinted as a carbon copy of the Hiss case.

"No such thing," says McCarey. "It is, I hope, the story of what hapens to a man when he loses his faith and falls for the Commie line. It is even more the story of what happens to his folks." The way he tells it, McCarey evidently aims to expose the fallacies rather than merely attack the forces of Communism.

He takes a typical American family, father, mother and three grown sons, to do the job. Dad, played by Dean Jagger, is a veteran of World War I. He wears that little cap rather cockily. Sometimes he comes home a bit mellow after an evening with old buddies. Mother—played by Helen Hayes—is no glamor girl. She's just wonderful, that's all. And what she knows without being told is even more so.

THE THREE BOYS are scattered. Two are in Korea. The other one (Robert Walker) was always the brightest at school. They had to scrape to give him the big opportunity. He muffed it.

As Myles Connolly says, "intellect is fine but character is more important." That's the way McCarey, Myles Connolly and John Lee Mahin have written "My Son John." The boy's intellect blossomed. His character went to seed; the seed of unbelief, underhandedness, disloyalty.

He became a traitor and even before the FBI caught up with him, his mother knew it. The agony broke her heart; cracked her mind. Too late except perhaps to save his own poor soul, the boy struggled out of the mess, disillusioned and forever scarred.

I HAVE SEEN bits of the film on the screen. There are likely to be some great performances. Beyond doubt McCarey has a great idea.

Now he is wrestling with the intangibles of screen magic to get it onto celluloid with all the humor, the grief, the trust, the feat, the hope and the fuss of little things which make family life the great, rich experience that it is.

Here is a task for a man who realizes that to show us just how false a religion the reds are following, he must give us an which begins when a young fellow squirms from the guiding hand of God because he feels sufficient unto himself.

You know that could happen to you or me.

EDWARD DMYTRYK, one of the ten men who went to jail for "refusing to answer" but who recently reversed his stand and told the Un-American Activities how as a Communist, he was in red conspiracy to control the Guilds and get Commie propaganda into movies, is to have another chance.

The King Brothers have hired him to direct a film called "Mutiny." The news is accompanied by much song and dance.

One important question remains unanswered. How does a man like Dmytryk prove himself?

Even after he had been indicted we saw on the screen a film based on "Christ In Concrete," which he directed in England. Titled "Salt to the Devil," it introduced that pro-Communist trick we all have to watch for, of subtly tying up religious belief with superstitious practice.

Here in Hollywood they are still at it.

EDWARD DMYTRYK'S recent disclosures were of great help to the Un-American Activities Committee and perhaps the F.B.I. Whether he is indeed a penitent or a mere informer we have yet to see.

People like Dmytryk, when given a chance to come back, should do so under careful supervision. They should not be licensed because they confessed and implicated others.
