After That Sigh of Relief

By MARY E. FITZGERALD 'And a spirit of abandonment on the first day of school some parents do little or no thinking about the whole matter of schooling until suddenly some urgent problem confronting one of their children is thrown in their laps.'

Parents for the most part are divided into two classes those who sigh with relief on the first day of school and then relax and the other, who also sigh, but who interest and meddle too much. In these days of registration, we readily agree with our little leaflet, in the statement that there is need of rules that parents can study and adopt for their own conduct in regard to their children's schooling.

WITH ALL DUE respect to our Catholic parents, it seems that the three basic facts set down in this leaflet reflect the mistakes made because fathers and mothers "know nothing about these rules of act contrary to them."

NO YOUR DARLING is not always right, so his stay of all treatment at the hands of teachers carefully. Did you sometimes say "Our child would never do such a thing." Did you in unfairness go to the school principal or the pastor without first talking over the matter with the teacher herself? How about homework? Show your attitude toward it. Does your child that parental and school authority are one.
