Tribute Paid 'Bill' Klem At Miami Funeral Services

Requiem Mass for William J. (Bill) Klem, 77, one of baseball's all-time great umpires, was offered in St. Patrick's Church, Miami Beach, according to the NCWC News Service. Burial was in Graceland Memorial Cemetery in Miami, Fla.

A congregation of some 200 mourners, including Ford C. Frick, new commissioner of baseball and former president of the National League, and "Pepper" Martin, who played with the St. Louis Cardinals when Klem was umpiring, heard Msgr. William Barry, pastor, who offered the Mass, declare:

"Bill Klem was an honest and honorable man. He had a year to reconcile himself to death and he was not afraid to die."

"The Old Arbitrator" died Sept. 16, 1951, in Doctors' Hospital where he had been a patient for a month. He had suffered from a heart ailment for the last three years. At his bedside was Mrs. Anna Mae Klem, his only immediate survivor.

BILL KLEM was born in Rochester on Feb. 22, 1874. He played first base and catcher at Reid's Field but early in life decided upon a career as an umpire in a day when an umpire's salary was meager. When he quit active umpiring in 1941, he was drawing a salary of $12,000 a year.

His career as a National League umpire spanned 36 years and stories about the colorful character are legion.

In 1939, the New York Baseball Writers Association presented Bill Klem with a plaque for distinguished service to baseball, an unusual honor for an umpire. After retirement in 1941, he was named umpire-in-chief of the National League. He traveled extensively on the lookout for young talent and gave a wealth of advice to youngsters he saw in action.

Mr. Klem is survived by several nieces and nephews in this area, among them the Rev. Howard W. Geck, pastor of St. Paul of the Cross Church, Honeoye Falls.
