

All Color Films Set At Museum Sunday

An all-color film program will be presented at the Rochester Museum of Arts and Sciences on Sunday, October 28, at 2:30 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. It is announced by Dr. Edward T. Boardman, acting director. The public is cordially invited and no tickets are required.

Films to be shown at the Museum are "The Loon's Necklace," presenting all the charm of an old North American Indian legend of how the loon acquired its white neckband with authentic carved ceremonial masks; "Vegetable Insects," a study of common garden pests and how best to destroy and control them; and "Modern France: The Land and the People," a picture of its industries, agriculture, natural resources and principal occupations.

ROCHESTER'S FINEST BOWLING SHIRTS

Every garment is manufactured to order in our own work shop.

Our price is as low as any Ready Made Garment.

Garbell
SPORTSWEAR
MFG. CO.
638 MONROE AVE.
Hillsdale 3550

RUND'S

48 SOUTH AVE.

Everything strictly fresh, strictly choice, perfectly prepared and served.

RUND'S

Famous

Full Course

DeLuxe

CLAM

BAKE

Ready to serve—2 P.M. to 11 P.M. Daily. Entire month of October.

Clam Broth, Celery and Olives, Broiled Mackerel, Boiled Potatoes (with Butter and Parsley), Steamed Clams, Milk fed Corn, Canned Sweet Potato, Broiled Lobster, Lemon Sherbert, Ice Cream or Jelly, Coffee, Tea or Milk.

New Lobster Pleasure!

BROILED STUFFED

LOBSTER

A very liberal portion of choice, tender lobster meat, equivalent to the amount taken from a 2 lb. Lobster, is placed in the shell of the lobster and broiled.

If you like LOBSTER—this is your dish.

It costs no more to buy the best—Rund's

STEAKS

Rich in flavor—Tender and juicy

You can enjoy a superb steak dinner for just the price of the entree.

Special Rund's Delicacies

SHORE DINNER

Clam Chowder or Ch. Broth, Ch. or Shrimp, Cocktail, Salad, Ala. Dressing, Celery, Radishes, Olives, Ch. of: Half Broiler or Whole Broiled Lobster, Steamed Little Neck Clams, Choice of: Potato, Vegetable, Beverage.

DUCK—SHAD ROE

SOFT SHELL CRABS

RUND'S

Oyster Bar and

Steak House

48 SOUTH AVE.

(Short Block from Main St.)

World Peace Radio Rosary Leaders Listed For Week

Leaders of the Radio Rosary for World Peace have been announced for the coming week. The broadcast is heard nightly over diocesan radio stations, at 10 p.m.

Carried by WSAJ, Rochester; WMBD, Auburn; WELM, Elmira; WWHB, Hornell; WGVA, Geneva; and WCLL, Corning, the program originates in Auburn on Tuesdays and in Elmira Saturdays. Other broadcasts are heard from the parish center of St. Francis Assisi Church, Rochester.

This week's leaders include: Saturday, October 27—Fred F. Shortleive, St. Patrick's, Elmira; Sunday—Eustice Delsenroth, Holy Name Society of St. Joseph's, Penfield; Monday—Michael Collichio, St. Francis Assisi; Tuesday—David O'Connell, St. Patrick's Church, Moravia, N.Y.; Wednesday—Charles Coyne, accompanied by the Daughters of Mary of St. Michael's, Thursday—John E. O'Brien and the Laymen's Retreat League of SS. Peter and Paul, Friday—Lawrence Murphy, St. Andrew's Seminary.

Radio Priest Raps 'Minority Complex'

London—(NC)—"The world is puzzled beyond itself that after all these centuries of persecution we are still here," the Rev. Agnellus Andrew, O.F.M., Britain's radio priest, said in Edinburgh, Scotland.

"There are more Catholics in the world than there ever have been in history," he added. "The influence of the Church on the minds, hearts and souls of men is probably as great or greater than ever before. "Face up to that fact and don't let minority complexes blind you to the grandeur of the Church's mission."

'In God We Trust' Plaques Urged In Public Schools

New York—(NC)—A housewife determined 18 months ago to place the motto on U.S. coins—"In God We Trust"—in her home community's public schools has led the Christians to launch a campaign urging others to imitate her example.

"If one woman could put 'In God We Trust' in 18 schools, think of the possibility that 100,000 other Americans would each work as hard to put it in just one school," the organization directed by the Rev. James Keller, M.M., said.

The Christopher News Notes, which have 400,000 readers, recalled the story of Mrs. Catherine E. Cleary, Stamford (Conn.) mother, who succeeded in having plaques with the "In God We Trust" motto erected in Stamford schools after a long fight against apathy, inertia and hostility.

Limited Vatican City space made it necessary for Vatican authorities to negotiate with the Italian government for a grant of land on which to set up the new transmitters.

The new Vatican Radio equipment will cost about $600,000 and will be strong enough to carry broadcasts in 23 languages to every corner of the globe. One of the transmitters was donated by Dutch Catholics.

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

Scout Leader

Miss Dorothea F. Sullivan, of Washington, who was elected Fourth Vice-President of the Girl Scouts of America, at the organization's 31st national convention in Boston, a former Girl Scout troop leader, she was a member of the Girl Scout National Board of Directors since 1944. A graduate of Trinity College, Washington, Miss Sullivan is on the faculty of the National Catholic School of Social Work.

Wald believes too that realism in motion pictures doesn't involve "shock tactics" which disregard ordinary standards of good taste. He might quote his own Academy winning "Johnny Belinda" to prove that point and since he didn't, I will.

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions between an evil situation played to bring the wrong into dramatic contrast with the right, and one in which a deplorable act was dramatized merely for its sensational value.

It is unlikely that a man with Jerry Wald's searching interest in thematic variety will always manage to escape criticism, but at least he grasps, as most movie producers might well do, the fact that the flaws which show up in objectionable movies, usually result from a wrong approach to realism in the drama.

He sees too that one of the main reasons why so many people lose the movie-going habit is that too many Hollywood producers keep trying to make over the screen successes of yesterday.

Wald's idea is that an individual film-making unit such as he and his partner Norman Kraas operate over at RKO, must build up a tremendous backlog of screenplays of various types. This way he stands a better chance of getting the right actors into the right parts (sometimes this star will not be available so Wald will switch to another story to star somebody else who is).

THE FIVOTAL situation in which a helpless girl, deaf and dumb, was attacked by a brute, might have dirtied up the whole picture. It didn't because Wald developed it with restraint and actor Stephen McNally, as the seducer, recognized the fine distinctions