Missionary Nuns Leave For Africa

New York — (NC) — Thirteen Missionary Sisters of Our Lady of Africa sailed from here as the first of two groups departing this month to take over missionary posts in Africa.

Because the nuns work in conjunction with the White Fathers in the African missions they are popularly known as the White Sisters. Ten of the group which departed took first vows on the Feast of Christ the King, October 28.

The White Sisters Convent at Metuchen, N. J., disclosed that a second group of three Sisters will leave for central Africa later in the month. The three are veterans in mission work. Each has spent from 20 to 30 years in African missions.

WHAT'S DOING AT THE DALYS'

Thanks for Markie

By MARY FINLEY DALY

"You'll have to get your own dinner tonight," I announced at breakfast yesterday. "There's a six o'clock meeting of the newspaper club—so dinner is your problem."

"And Pat won't be home either?" Mary sighed.

"Well, if you can't boil hot dogs, you're to be pitied," I answered, putting the final touches to the lunch bags and lining up the six of them.

"I thought I saw a big chicken in the refrigerator," Markie said. "Couldn't we fry that?"

"Oh, sure," I said nonchalantly, certain that none of the hot-dog and hamburger-cooks on duty for the evening shift could cope with a chicken.

But you never know at our house . . .

Getting home about nine o'clock, I was met at the front door by the whole gang, all talking at once of the wonderful dinner that Markie had cooked.

"Best chicken we ever had," Johnny declared.

"And smashed potatoes and gravy and chocolate cake," Ginny sighed at the thought.

"You know me," the Head of the House added. "I never go for peas and carrots but the way Markie fixed 'em . . ."

• • •

EVEN this morning the memory of last night's dinner lingered,

"We always thought your fried chicken was good, Mom," Johnny said, "but Markie's . . ."

"That's right," the Head of the House agreed. "Tender, but crunchy on the outside even the skin and bones were good."

"You mean you ate the bones?"

"I took the drumstick to bed and sucked it," Ginny admitted.

Markie took the praise with the modesty but the assurance of a French chef.

"It wasn't too hard," she admitted, "but I did pay attention. All I did was read the cookbook and do what it said. Don't you ever read the cookbook, Mom?"

I admitted that I'd never read a cookbook on how to fry a chicken why, it was like boiling an egg, rather self-evident. You just floured the chicken, and then you fried it. What trick of alchemy had I overlooked all these 25 years?

• • •

THIS morning, after the gang had left, I did not read the morning paper with the second cup of coffee. You've guessed it: I read the cookbook.

It wasn't hard to find the recipe Markie had used. Line by line down the margin a greasy, floury fingertip had moved . . .

"Cut into serving pieces a young chicken," the recipe read. "Season with salt and pepper. Dredge lightly with flour. Melt in a skillet butter or bacon drippings. When it is hot add the chicken. Cook and turn it in the hot fat until it is brown. Reduce heat, cover skillet and continue cooking chicken until done (from 20 to 30 minutes). Remove from pan and thicken the drippings with flour. Add cream, salt and pepper."

Hm-m-m . . . exactly the way I'd been frying chicken all these years — and with no paeans of praise. I started re-reading . . . perhaps I'd missed something. Could that be it? If so, we'd all be missing something before the next marketing day.

Making a quick dash for the refrigerator I looked at the butter supply — TWO AND ONE HALF POUNDS MISSING . . . and a pint of cream!

Another look at the cookbook's recipe for "smashed potatoes, as Ginny calls them. "Add cream and a generous lump of butter" (and Markie's generosity verges on the extravagant), chocolate cake, "one half cup of butter" . . . with two more tablespoons for the icing! And those peas and carrots — no wonder they had tasted better than the margerined ones they'd been used to.

• • •

WELL, God love her, Markie had dished up a good dinner for the folks. If the book said butter, how was Markie to know that margerine or drippings or shortening could be substituted . . . that butter costs 80 cents a pound?

At dinner this evening talk again went back to the banquet they had had last night. And then we began talking about Thanksgiving plans and Thanksgiving dinner.

"You know," the Head of the House said, since Markie is fourteen shows such an aptitude for cooking, maybe it would be a good idea to let her get into the highest brackets this year. Maybe out of the potato peeling department and into the basket roasting?"

"Fine," I agreed mentally resolving to show Markie how 11 cents worth of margerine could be made to [illegible] cents worth [illegible] superb [illegible] cook."

'Queen'

Clarice C. Davis, 20, University of Illinois senior, is first Negro ever to be chosen Homecoming Queen by the students of a Big Ten school. She presided over festivities which ended with the Illinois-Iowa football game November 10. Miss Davis, whose home is Chicago, is a graduate of Catholic grammar and high schools and an active member of the Newman Club at Illinois.

Pontiff Receives Radio Musicians

Castelgandolfo, Italy — (NC) — Where truth, goodness and beauty are concerned in radio and motion pictures the best is none too good," His Holiness Pope Pius XII told a group of German musicians here.

The musicians are members of the chamber orchestra of the Bavarian Radio and were received in audience at the papal summer villa here.

"Radio should broadcast only the truth which keeps edifices, and fortifies the individual and the community," the Pope said. "Radio must defend and propagate moral goodness reflecting it faithfully, giving it its rightful place in the hierarchy of ethical values."

The best [illegible] said Pope said [illegible] forget the superior [illegible] of serving [illegible] and goodness and show [illegible] what these two constitute."

Prior to the audience the musicians rendered two Mozart numbers for the Pope.

AMONG WOMEN

Here And In Eternity

By MARY LENNON SNYDER

Last week I wrote of retirements which I witnessed during October here in Auburn, and now comes word that Miss Mary A. Newsome retired after eighteen and one half years as President of Elmira Deanery Council, Diocesan Council of Catholic Women.

Miss Newsome has served so long, so well, and so faithfully that her name and that of the National Council of Catholic Women have become practically synonymous in the Southern Tier.

Throughout her years in office Miss Newsome displayed that enviable characteristic of a good leader — the ability to keep her experienced workers loyal and interested and at the same time to welcome and recruit new members.

• • •

MY OWN interest in the Council dates back to Miss Newsome's encouragement and enthusiasm and her presence at meetings her moderate and charitable manner, her encouraging remarks have always been a source of strength and reassurance to the rest of us.

Let me hasten to add that when we salute Miss Newsome upon her retirement we are not forgetting the other valiant and hard-working women who have served the Council and their own affiliated organizations.

I am thinking of Mrs Edmund Burke Maloney who served as many years as Diocesan Chairman of Library and Literature. Possessing considerable literary style, Mrs. Maloney as chairman of the Diocesan Committee wrote letters which were a treat to read. A year ago Mrs. Maloney asked to be relieved of her duties, but her presence at meetings and her correspondence remind us all that she is with us in spirit and with prayers.

• • •

SO REALLY there is no true retirement for anyone imbued with the apostolic spirit of Catholic Action. Those who for a variety of personal reasons cannot actively participate can always pray for those who are in the forefront of the battle sites of the Church Militant.

Therefore we do not say farewell to Miss Newsome or Mrs Maloney or a host of other women who are no longer as active among us as formerly. We know that whether on this earth or in eternity they continue to be one with us through prayer.
