Red Cross Urges Safe Precautions In Water

Common sense water safety precautions for bathing and swimming are given today by the American Red Cross as follows:

"When enjoying health-giving water sports, always observe a code of safe conduct.

"Avoid long swims after a season of inactivity; train gradually. Swimming is the first water sport to learn; it makes others safe. After eating, wait at least two hours before swimming; to avoid dangerous stomach cramps.

"Failure to look before diving causes many deaths. Be sure the water is at least six feet deep, and free from hidden stumps and rocks. Test the depth of an unknown beach with an oar or pole before bathing. Otherwise, sudden step-offs may cause an accident.

"NEVER SWIM more than 50 yards from shore unless accompanied by a boat. Bathing at night is dangerous except at carefully guarded and brilliantly lighted place.

"If you find yourself too far from shore and tired, conserve your strength by turning over quietly on your back and paddling easily with hands and feet, getting rested until you can work your way to shore. Don't excitedly try to swim for shore; you may become exhausted and not get there. Call for help after you have your breath; if you then need it.

"If seized with cramps in the lower leg, lie as quickly as possible on the back, seize the big toe and pull toward you until it hurts. If cramp returns, squeeze the knotted muscle with the fingers quickly, as though trying to force thumb and fingers through the muscle.

"PADDLE EASILY to the nearest support, massage will kneading the muscle, and rest the part with hot applications if possible. Such cramps are not serious and by bearing some discomfort and swimming easily the victim should be able to climb out and rest. If cramp is violent, immediately call for help.
