Women's Role In American Life Amazes German Visitor In U. S. To Make Survey

By FAWN SCHEFFEL

The custom of publishing brides' pictures in newspapers was a new idea to Mrs. Maria Wosnik, who was visiting Rochester last week. In Germany, Mrs. Wosnik's home, periodicals don't publicize the nuptial events.

Coming to the United States from Duesseldorf, Germany with seven others, Mrs. Wosnik is a member of an International Cooperative Exchange Team studying American life.

It is Mrs. Wosnik's mission to observe and carry back to her homeland the ideas and pattern of activities of American women. Representing the Catholic Women's Organizations of the city of Duesseldorf, Mrs. Wosnik expressed wonderment at the active participation of women in American life.

"IN GERMANY, it is not so," she said in an interview last week. "The women do the work of the home while the men participate in political and social work."

The corps of Europeans arrived in New York City five weeks ago where they had their first glimpse of the famous skyline. Of the metropolis, Mrs. Wosnik said, "There is too much stone, and too little nature."

Not having the command of English she desired, she explained, "I have not enough words to describe Broadway — it is all movement."

"The group consists of six men and two women each having a different phase of life in the United States to study. Among the group is a social worker, teacher, journalist, scientist, city official and labor leader.

CONDITIONS IN Germany are described as "terrible" by Mrs. Wosnik. Education, and life in general is dominated by the close proximity of the Russian thought and philosophy.

"Americans are very active in all things," the visitor said, "charity and community service and you have such wonderful schools!"

Rochester's parks impressed Mrs. Wosnik and she said Rochesterians have been friendly and most helpful. During their stay in the Flower City the exchange group was under the sponsorship of Louis Kelly, 708 East Blvd., who was in Germany during World War 2 and was impressed by the need there. Life in Germany is almost beyond comprehension the visitor said. Families are living in basements and bomb shelters. "This is not a problem for West Germany, but for the whole world."

Much thought is being given to the possibility of having a flight from East to West Germany, the border between the two being a frontier rather than a mere boundary.

AMERICAN MEN surprised Mrs. Wosnik who is not accustomed to the man of the house lending a hand at home. "Why, here the men do marketing, and help in the household," she remarked. "There's more cooperation among people in the United States than in Germany," she said.

The team left Rochester for Chicago from where they will travel to Portland, Oregon, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Houston, New Orleans and back to Washington where they will report on their impressions of the phases of American life they have studied.

Early in December they will

Monks Mark Return To Cassino Abbey

The one wing into which the monks have now moved is not yet completely rebuilt, but sufficient progress has been made for the monks to live in it. The monks will continue to rebuild the abbey bit by bit. The walls and roof of the abbey church were completed some time ago. Work is continuing on the interior and the decorations.

MUCH OF the former material is being used in the abbey's rebuilding. The monks and workmen crawled and literally paved through the rubble in an effort to salvage every usable piece of material.

Even tiny scraps of ornamental marble which formed part of the marble inlay work and ornamental design were recovered and patiently reattached to be exact copies of the former monument.

Hobby Show To Open At Museum On Oct. 19th
