Stage Heritage Traced by Bassetts To Relative, Jessie Bonstelle

This generation may not remember Jessie Bonstelle. They may only know that off Ridge Road West there is a Jessie Street and another called Bonesteel. Or perhaps parents or grandparents have told them of "Rochester's Sweetheart" of the turn of the century.

Jessie Bonstelle was one of the first if not the greatest actress to come from this area and was born to an age when the stock company meant theatre.

Born in the town of Greece, the late Miss Bonstelle was raised in Webster in the family homestead, which later became known as the Bonstelle tract. As a child, her talent for recitation was first encouraged by her mother and later by the Sisters of St. Joseph who taught her at Nazareth Academy.

AS THE YEARS passed, her aptitude for the stage brought Miss Bonstelle into stock work until by 1896 she was a well-known leading lady.

Through the suggestion of J. J. Shubert she founded her own company and began the tours which made her as well beloved in Buffalo and Providence as she was in her own Rochester.

Those were the days of repertory and there was no end to the number and diversity of roles required of the leading actress. Miss Bonstelle played them all —from "The Two Orphans" to "Camille." We are told that her

JESSIE BONSTELLE

"Trilby" was one of the great stage experiences of the time, as Miss Bonstelle enacted the title role opposite her husband, Alexander H. Stewart as Svengali.

She negotiated for eight years with the Alcott estate in order to have the famous novel "Little Women" dramatized and Miss Bonstelle was the first "Jo."

UNTIL 1916, the name of Jessie Bonstelle held the place of honor on the marquees of the old Baker Theater, the Cooke Opera House and the Lyceum. Finally she moved to Detroit where she bought the Garrick Theatre and opened the Bonstelle School of the Drama.

It was from the Shrine of the Little Flower that each year Rochesterians heard her over the radio again portray the Magdalen. It was in Detroit that she became known as the "Maker of Stars."

Many of her students gained great renown on the stage: Ben Lyon, Ann Harding, Jessie Royce Landis and today's "first lady," Katharine Cornell.

Jessie Bonstelle died in 1932 at the age of 61. She left great memories to those who had known her, seen her, or had been her pupils. She left a great heritage to at least two youngsters in Rochester, her cousins, Joseph and Ida Bassett.

THE FIRST theatrical venture of the Bassetts, who were raised in St. Augustine's Parish, was "The Harlequinades." The brother and sister founded a company of young and energetic actors and performed at St. Francis Xavier Hall, through the kindness of their moderator, the late Rev. Francis X. Kunz.

Ida Bassett became one of the foremost actresses with the Blackfriar Guild when a chapter was opened in Rochester and will be remembered in performances of "Stage Door," "Diplomacy" and many others.

Her portrayal in "The Kingdom of God," directed by Amy Hutchison, was a memorable one which brought great tribute from the critics.

Joseph Bassett, meanwhile, had gone on to New York with his good friend, John Lund. After a stint at the World's Fair, he did some movie work doubling for Gary Cooper and Henry Fonda. He then appeared with Victor Mature in the film, "Kiss of Death."

THE WAR TOOK Ida Bassett to Washington and Joseph into service for over four years, during which time he was wounded in Normandy.

IDA BASSETT

Returning to this country, Joseph made a series of training films for the government at Walter Reed Hospital. Then came a period of summer stock at Fiskhill and Beacon with Walter Folmer and Alex Nicole.

Joseph has appeared many times in TV on "Studio One" and the "Philco Playhouse." He married the lovely Carol Hill, a young actress who has become a TV star.

Now in Hollywood with his wife, both active in films and television work, Joseph is nearer his sister Ida than his native Rochester. Because of ill health, Ida now resides in Arizona where she is an active member of the Phoenix Little Theatre.

IT IS A BIG step from "The Harlequinades" to Hollywood and the late Jessie Bonstelle would be justly proud of her young cousins, as are Mr. and Mrs. George Bassett, parents of Joseph and Ida.

The Bassetts, both very active members of St. Augustine's, live on Sherwood Avenue and, although separated by many miles from their children, are their most eager fans. —SMETT

NEW And NOW

By ROBERT SMETT

This is the time in the year that every columnist seems to feel it a bounden duty to list the 10 best movies. The practice of late has broadened out to include the 10 worst, the 10 most inoffensive, and even the 10-most mediocre.

IN A CURRENT roundup in CUE magazine, Jesse Zunser lists his opinion on "bests and worsts" and closes with this paragraph.

"And so, turning from the past to the future for a moment, I see a picture in which Joan Crawford and/or Bette Davis will suffer (together with their audiences), in which Rita Hayworth will play a headhunter ("Salome"), in which bandits will be glorified, thugs will be called misunderstood lads who were always kind to their mothers, and gunmolls will be praised as pure of heart, if dumb of brain.

"A talking jackass named Francis, having gone to West Point (courtesy of Universal Pictures), becomes an officer, in time a general, and then — who knows? . . . The White House? Can this be progress?"

On a recent visit to New York, I saw the French film, "Forbidden Games," which gets my vote for the "Best Foreign Film of 1952."

AS HAVE MOST European imports during the past year, the French films have been rather sub-standard. But just as the year was running out, along came this extraordinary film directed with expert skill by Rene Clement.

"Forbidden Games" is certainly one of the most touching motion pictures ever made. The performances which Clement manages to get from tiny Brigitte Fossey as Paulette and Georges Poujouly as Michel are tremendous.

You ask yourself how much of this is really acting and how much of it must Clement have caught through artful trickery and minute direction. But however he accomplished this is not the point, he has captured on film two utterly beautiful performances from a pair of gifted youngsters.

NOW PLAYING at the Little Carnegie Theatre in New York, "Forbidden Games" will soon be seen in principal cities throughout the country.
