

Nazareth College Academic Freedom Policy Given In Symposium Program

That academic freedom is a teacher's inalienable right, stemming directly from his nature as a man; that with this right he has a duty to teach the truth for the good of the state; and that teachers may not teach contrary to the policies of the institution they have agreed to uphold are points brought out in a symposium at Nazareth College last Friday.

Discussing the problem in sectarian institutions, Miss Smith said that "having a Catholic institution is the ideal situation for the practice of academic freedom."

AS PART of the program, students were given the following statement of policy on academic freedom at Nazareth College.

"The moral freedom and individual integrity of the members of the staff and faculty are in no way sacrificed in this College. The members are free to carry on research and to make known their conclusions, unrestricted by the Church, within the limits of truth. This truth, whether natural or revealed, is always to be respected by both the institution and the members of the faculty and staff."
