Catholic Schools Face Teacher Shortage

Colleges Eyed On Red Issue

" by J. J. GILBERT

Washington-(NC)-The Capical is going to be watching this summer to see what American colleges do about communists in their midst.

The question of Reds and Redsympathizers on college faculties has been very much to the fore here in recent weeks. The question has never been so widely discussed as now, It has occupled the attention of a Congressional investigating committee, legislators have spoke out on it as individuals, highly placed persons have aired their views, and even some educators have had their say.

BUT IT REMAINED for the recent convention of the Association of American Universities to bring much of the attention to focus on one spot. The association said by resolution that communists, by the nature of their beliefs, are disqualified for university positions. The association added, however, that the disciplining and firing of such faculty members is a responsibility of the university and not of the political authority.

And so, people are watchingpoliticians, public officials and private citizens — to see what American colleges and universities are going to do. It is not thought that action will be taken in what remains of the current school year. But it is expected that something will be done this summer, before a new school year gets under way,

THERE ARE TWO points of speculation involved: 1. What will the colleges do to implement

Enrollment Rise Taxes Buildings, Feachers' Ranks

Atlantic City, N. J. - (NC) - Catholic schools in the S. face serious shortages and these shortages will increase during the next ten years.

That was learned here by 9,000 eading Catholic educators at the age, the educators decided is the 50th annual convention of the National Catholic Educational Association. The educators have returned to schools and colleges throughout the nation with renewed determination to do something about it.

THIS IS the situation: Catholic chools today find themselves vith more pupils than ever before and more seeking enrollnent -- but with no immediate neans for handling them.

Top concern of Catholic elesentary and secondary schools

The problem: Where will these teachers be found? Religious elementary and secondary school communities reported that for systems this year. Moscow Peace Bid Fails To Ease War In East Germany

Berlin - (NC) - There are rumors in the communist-ruled Eastern Zone in Germany that pressure on the Christian churches may be eased as part of Moscow's worldwide peace offensive. But, so far at least there are no indications bearing out such ramors and hopes. Some are of the opinion that Mescow's directions for peachful gestures have not yet reached the East Gorman satal. lite regime. Others believe that the communicis here want to deal as many blown as massible to the Catholic and Protestant Church until the bosses at Moscow deem it expedient to eight. By 1900, it is estimated they will enroll about one out of every seven

Yet, on a nationwide scale, only 50 per cent of all Catholic chile dren of elementary school age are in Catholic schools. And only 35 per cent of the Catholics of high school age are in Catholic high schools.

With birth rate increases and with more parents wanting to, send their children to Catholic schools, the Catholic schools face an estimated increase of about one million pupils within the ment eight years.

About 125,000 additional pupils were absorbed into the Catholic the number of new pupils will be ous," the educators agreed, But the tremendous growth needed to meet enrollment increases and to provide school buildings, must be financed. Where will the money come from is another big problem.

And the educators face other idifficulties. They want Catholic teaching to continue to improve as the schools expand. The new goal in teacher-training is at least a four-year college education for lay or religious teachers in elementary schools. Faced with higher professional standards and a teacher shortage which calls for more teachers in the schools here and now, the educators face a knotty problem.

Curriculum improvements are another aim. A research program, now under way, seeks to determine the type of courses that will best suit students in varied regions throughout the I'. S. Despite schoolroom, teacher and financial shortages the Catholic schools are determined to core tinue to improve curricula.

THEN THERE is educational television to be considered both property still held by the Cath- as a special problem and as an aid in relieving the teacher shortages. The educators considered A communist newspaper in this one, too, at the Atlantic City convention.

With all the obstacles added up and faced aquarely, the Catholic leaders came away with a determination that, no matter what the problems, Catholic education will have to meet them. It must meet them, these leaders felt, to hold its own on the American educational scene-but even more because only so can it carry out its basic mission of giving Catholic children sound Catholic training.
