That Seventh Wave

By Mary Tinley Daly

Ever get exasperated — but thoroughly? Over things, minor in the eternal scheme of things, but wearing on patience and budget?

Mary Daly

"Twas that way at our house this past week — on nagging annoyance after another and all so needless. First a storm ripped the garage door to pieces, simply because somebody—that anonymous "somebody"—had left it open.

Then a bad report card, for which the culprit received a more-than-ordinarily-severe calling down. And the battery in the car went dead — "somebody" had left the lights on.

Then yesterday we discovered that Ginny really had lost her glasses this time though many times they've only been misplaced. Oh, they're "misplaced" this time too — but where? For days the little rascal has been kidding us along, losing precious time when the glasses might have been located.

"I LEFT 'EM AT school," she'd say and we'd be assured. Or, "They're over at Bobby Fallon's where I was watching television."

Finally came a show-down. The glasses were not at the Fallons'. Nor were they at school—investigation of the lost-and-found showed dozens of rosaries, several uniform belts, a wallet or two but no glasses. They aren't in Ginny's room, either.

We've turned that upside down and unearthed several other lost articles—like Pat's brown shoes and Eileen's prayer book—but still no glasses. We've looked in all the likely and unlikely spots around the house and yard, said prayers to St. Anthony, and finally decided we'd have to buy another pair.

• • •

SO MADDENING, so frustrating—knowing they're somewhere—and now having to invest another $20!

That's when I really flew off the handle.

"Take it easy," the Head of the House said. "You know . . . duck your head and wait for the seventh?"

It's a familiar saying between us, dating from the first summer we spent at the ocean and I, a mid-westener, waded out and became panicky at the power of the waves. "Just duck," the Head of the house said, holding my hand. "See, you got through that one. Wait for the seventh, that's the wallop—and you can duck that too!"

EVER SINCE, when the going gets rough, we've "ducked our heads" and found we've lived through this mishap, then that. Some of them were "seventh waves" too and they weren't so easy. Then we'd look back on the others with amusement.

This time, though the admonition reduced the boiling, I was still simmering at all these waves coming so close together, finding it hard to duck and come up smiling . . . Until last night when Mary came home complaining of a pain: right side, way down—that dread appendix region. Garage doors, report cards, battery and glasses were forgotten.

• • •

Mary lies in bed with an ice bag on the painful spot. She has her temperature taken so often that she says she feels like a chain smoker. And if we ask her again if she's nauseated, she says she's quite sure she will be.

THIS MAY BE IT—the appendicitis we all fear. And it may not. All we can do is wait and see.

But in the future at least one person in our house—that one behind this typewriter—can learn to "duck" and survive the lesser waves with better grace and more patience!

Be Wise, Be Prepared

AMONG WOMEN

By Mary Lennon Snyder

In my childhood one of the remarks we used to wait for my father to make and which he invariably did on the coldest days of the year was "Right now I would like to be sitting on the equator!"

Mrs. Snyder

So contrary to the concept of the "imaginary lion" running around the globe, I always visualized the equator as a good strong fence on which my father could rest his generously proportioned frame and enjoy the tropic breezes.

Perhaps, then it was childhood conditioning, or it could have been the contrariness of New York State winters that have made a lover of the warm and sunny countries.

All Tennessee our annual delight was the [illegible] when the dogwood [illegible] pink and [illegible] in [illegible]. Once again it was [illegible] to [illegible] my [illegible] to [illegible] to [illegible] in the background. Of course, as any mother knows, they did not stay out an equal length of time but returned inside where the bundle-process was reversed.

Today, however, as much as most parents welcome the summer, there is in many hearts a dread; and the sign of the slightest fever of nausea sends cold chills to our hearts as the dread word, polio, suggests itself.

THE NATIONAL Council of Catholic Women is cooperating with the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis in spreading information about Gamma Globulin. Information and education are most important because to live in a state of false hope is as foolish as to exist in unrealistic fear.

While the stories almost unbelievable, I read in one of the Syracuse daily papers of the miracle of a Syracuse mother who had been able to buy a quantity of the Gamma Globulin at terrific cost for her children's use during the coming summer.

The case came to the attention of health authorities when she went back to the drug supply house to exchange her current stock for a fresh supply. Since then an order has gone out that (GG) be pooled in a national stock pile for distribution under the direction of the Office of Defense Mobilization.

Our National President of the N.C.C.W. has asked all Catholic Women to assist the National Foundation's public information work by (1), Cooperating with our local National Foundation Chapter; (2), Procuring speakers, [illegible] [illegible] publications or visual aids at meetings of our organizations; (3), placing articles in bulletins of your organizations or parishes.

The National Foundation has a wide variety of publications, films and exhibits which it will be pleased to supply to you in planning your educational work.
