Students Offered State Job Service

A new program to give Rochester employers and Rochester students at out-of-town colleges a chance to get together will be inaugurated during the coming Christmas vacation.

Charles H. Howard, Rochester district superintendent for the state Labor Department's employment division, announced the new service with this explanation:

"MANY ROCHESTER employers would like to get the first chance to hire local college students now at school out of town. And many of these students, who would prefer to work in their hometown, might be tempted to take the first job offered, even in another section of the country."

Howard said that such students are invited to visit the commercial and technical office of the employment service during their Christmas vacation for counseling, testing and interviewing. After that, the employment service will contact the employers and show what talent is available.
