WHAT'S DOING AT THE DALYS
"I'd Love To!"

By Mary Tinley Daly

In a moment of nonchalance, you say, "Why certainly. I'd love to!"

Such eager-beaver acceptance usually gets you into plenty of hot water with time and energy consuming assignments. But when your own daughter asks you — and all she asks is that you make a

Excavations Throw Light On St. Augustine's City

Bone, Algeria, North Africa — (NC) — This seaport, the Hippo of ancient times and the See of St. Augustine, came into its own during the African campaign of World War II when it served as an important debarcation point. Today, it takes on added significance for Catholics because excavations now in progress shed new light on the fifth-century Bishop, who has been called one of Catholicism's greatest minds.

Recent excavations uncovered a chapel in the form of a seven-leaf clover which St. Augustine used as a monastery over which he presided.

FIVE YEARS ago, St. Augustine's cathedral itself was found in the midst of ruins which yielded evidence of five civilizations — Punic, Byzantine, Roman, Christian and Vandal.

Archaeologists have determined and clearly marked the church's dimensions, 162 feet long and 65 feet wide. Rich mosaics cover the floor area and stout marble pillars rise from the nave. Unearthed within the church's precincts were a baptismal font, presbytery with episcopal throne, and tombs of bishops.

Excavations currently are digging about the ruins of another cathedral, supposedly that of a rival Donatist bishop. In his writings, St. Augustine speaks of the "noise" of the Donatists — an heretical sect of the day — from the neighboring cathedral, which he said could be too well heard in his own church.

Today, overlooking Bone and the Mediterranean is a twin-towered cathedral presided over by the Bishop of Constantine, Algeria, consecrated in Roman times. Directly in front of the cathedral is the site of the ancient ruins.

A RETURNED French admiral and potter scholar, E. Marec, is the man most responsible for the important findings. His initial interest in Bone dates from World War I, when he served with French naval forces there. Twenty years later he began excavation work under the auspices of the French government in Algeria and with support from the Ecole des Beaux Arts of Algiers.

CAMP STELLA MARIS GIRLS

AMONG WOMEN
Discussion Of Religion

By Mary Lennon Snyder

In many cities during the past few weeks Catholics working in shops and offices sitting around a bridge table and in countless other places where they meet their non-Catholic friends, have been plagued by questions arising from the film "Martin Luther."

Mrs. Snyder: "We all know good taste and good manners frown upon the discussion of controversial matters at social gatherings, but we should also always remember that Catholics never make compromises where matters of faith and morals are concerned."
