Fire Marian Year Stamp Received Here

The Marian Year stamp issued by Fire in honor of the Blessed Mother was received on a letter addressed to Mrs. Edward O'Callahan, 33 Selye Terrace, this week. Blue in the color of the Blessed Virgin, the three-penny stamp bears a likeness of the Madonna and Child with the word "Eire" imprinted on it. Ireland opened the Marian Year in December with special ceremonies in churches and cathedrals throughout the country and the Irish have been highly enthusiastic in paying tribute to the Blessed Virgin Mary, since. Besides private devotions, there are floodlit churches, illuminated statues and ornately decorated shrines. Issuance of the special Marian Year stamp is a recognition by the government of the Year's significance to the Irish.

Children At Mass

One of the many boons of fair weather in this climate is the increased number of children who are brought to Sunday Mass. The variety of thoughts which the preceding sentence evokes would perhaps supply material for several of these columns. However, at the outset may I say that any suggestions which I may make are not set down as being undeniably the best possible ones. Children vary, as do parents and situations so I can only draw on my observation, both personal and from a study of psychology and from my own experience. In this connection I should like to mention and recommend "You Family Circle" by Sister Jean Patrice, C. S. J. I suspect that my reason for liking this book so well lies hidden in the fact that I find her observation and experience with children has led her to a set of conclusions closely paralleling my own. The first question that presents itself to young parents probably is "Should I take my child to Mass? Won't he disturb others? Haven't I heard critical friends often say, 'She might better stay home with the child than come to church and disturb everyone?'"

THESE QUESTIONS were answered beautifully for me by a Redemptorist Father who preached a Retreat in my parish church during the past year. Speaking on the Mass, the priest urged his hearers to attend Mass often and to bring the little children to Mass also. Then he said something which I heartily agree: "Don't worry about the little ones disturbing others in the church. They will never disturb any real devotion, all they will disturb is selfishness." At this point I should like to interpose the statement that, although I am in hearty agreement with the thought that people who complain about being disturbed by children can not be in very profound communion with their Creator, sometimes parents who bring children to church reveal themselves as emotionally immature as their offspring.

Canandaigua Lists Weekend Race Slate

Canandaigua—A Rochester stock car driver who has shown a world of improvement in his last two starts will be among the favorites Sunday afternoon when promoter Jerry Earl presents his 10th card of the year at Ontario County Fairgrounds, one mile north of Canandaigua. Al Webber, who pilots the speedy No. 197 car registered a fifth Friday night at Monroe County Fairgrounds and came right back with another fifth on Sunday afternoon, after two seasons of in-and-out driving. A former Brockport resident, the tall, rangy Webber now calls Rochester home, and may provide plenty of opposition for the track leaders this week. A 20-lap feature will again climax the regular NASCAR program, and it will be preceded by three 8-lap heats, two 10-lap semifinals and a 10-lap consolation race with the first green flag dropping at 2:30 p.m.

WHAT'S DOING AT THE DALY'S A-1 Priority

It was the hottest day of a series of sizzlers, and Sunday at that... but Ginny had her heart set on seeing "the sisters that pray for the senators." She had heard us speak of them, the Franciscan Nuns of the Most Blessed Sacrament who recently moved to our town converted a large house into a cloister and were holding "open house" before retiring into seclusion. And it's not only the senators they will pray for—as we explained to Ginny who has been watching "the hearings"—they are bound by their rule to pray for all the government, and for all who ask their prayers. It was an eye-opening experience to meet and talk with the nuns—well worth the effort of leaving a comparatively cool back yard and joining the milling throng worming its way through the rooms and hallways of the new cloister. "They'll sleep up here?" people gasped as they ascended the stairs to a stifling attic. There the four "intern" or strictly cloistered nuns have their tiny cubicles, separated by sheets hanging from poles. Even their living quarters on the second floor are hot and bare. "WE HOPE, some day, to have air conditioning," one of the sisters said and smiled, perspiration softening the linen band around forehead, face and throat. "But it doesn't really matter." One sensed that nothing, in a material sense, really mattered. "It must have been quite a step to take, Sister, to go into this strict order," a man in the crowd commented, noting the slats adjusted at the window so that after they were closed never had a view of the world of people—nothing but sky and tree tops. "It was a step," the nun replied in her brown serge habit with the black veil smiled serenely. "But before that step we were given grace to see the emptiness of the world with its fleeting pleasures. We know that one hour of adoration at the feet of Our Lord is worth more than anything—and we give constant adoration." She explained that the sisters take turns all day and all night—one hour at a time in the day, two hours taken from sleep at night to spend in chapel. EVEN CONVERSATION among themselves is limited to recreation periods—three quarters of an hour at noon, a half-hour in the evening. At all other times they communicate with one another by means of signs or just the most necessary remarks ("We believe that we can thus be more recollected.") "Isn't there something we could send you, Sister?" asked a motherly looking woman. "A comfortable chair?" "Thank you, my dear," Sister answered, "but we never lean back on a chair anyway. If you want to—well, we could use scraps of linoleum. We don't use scarves on our bedside stands, but we like bits of linoleum." She went on to say that such scraps are useful too under the wash basins from which the sisters wash themselves, kneeling on the floor. "Easy enough when you're young but hard as you get older." Another self-imposed practice of poverty and penance is in their eating implements: wooden fork and spoon. ("A wooden fork feels odd in the mouth after using silver in the world.") * * * THERE WERE literally hundreds of people in the crowd that for Sunday afternoon—many of them, obviously, under protest. However, after the first few moments there was a reverent and respectful hush. Here was a way of life so simple and sincere—without so difficult from the worldly point of view—that every one of these human beings felt the sense of vocation inspiring these four nuns who will never again see the world of people for whom they will pray until they die. A woman, with tears in her eyes, raised a hand to shield her face as she leaned toward Sister and whispered: "I'm not a Catholic, but please pray..." A man—the one wed tentatively categorized as "Mr. Ambassador" on the tour through the house—murmured, "Please pray, Sister, please pray..." "Sister, the doctor just told me..." Everyone asked prayers. IT'S THAT WAY all the time. Parents call in the pre-dawn hours, anxious relatives telephone from hospitals. Phone lines are open day and night. The sisters gladly pray for the sick and the sinful, for the anxious and the confused, for those too numbened to pray for themselves or loved ones—for anyone in need of divine intercession. This is an A-1 priority—a number to put on the cover of the telephone book alongside police, fire and all the other emergency numbers.
