"To the extent that we, convinced Christians, withdraw from the effort, to that extent we abandon the secular colleges to the secularists. Wherever the liberty of the act of faith' is conceded, whether in the university or in the state, there devolves upon Catholics the duty to take their place in the organization and conduct of all affairs on the secular plane. Segregation in such circumstances might well become.a sin of omission. Participation cannot be postponed until that day ... when all men shall confess: 'one' faith, one baptism/ It is an unattainable ideal in the that are essentially determinant of a whole intellectual drift." And am reminded that men from these few 'centres' of learning are frequently called down to Washington over a week-end to be determinant of other drifts, and am glad to remember that a few Catholics are present.

CECILY HASTINGS, an English Catholic journalist and Evidence Guild speaker, will take you off your feet with the rushing intelligence of her analyses. Her brilliant judgments come in waves — you get sait in your eye and seaweed in your mouth swimming back to see if she could mean what she has said, but it's worth it and she does mean it.
