Attend Daily Mass

First Student Holy Hour Attracts 200 In Hornell

Hornell—The first Students' Holy Hour to be held in Hornell was attended by more than 200 high school pupils from St. Ann's and St. Ignatius Loyola Churches.

The Eucharistic exercise was held in St. Ann's Church Sunday evening from 7 until 8 o'clock.

The Rev. Norbert Nolan, assistant pastor of St. Ignatius Loyola Church, and the Rev. Richard Hart, assistant pastor of St. Ann's conducted the services.

A MEDITATION on the goodness and love of Christ in the Blessed Sacrament was read by Father Hart.

Father Nolan gave a talk on the generosity which should be shown in the service of Christ. Who has given man so much. He gove Simon the Cyrene as an example of the type person who does not want to be bothered serving Christ.

"Simon was forced to pick up the Cross and walk behind Our Lord. At first he was unwilling, but as the journey proceeded, he accepted the cross graciously. Tradition tells us that Simon became a Christian and his two sons, priests.

"Sometimes, students are like Simon. They must be forced, by parents and others who have their interests at heart, to do what they should really want to do," Father Nolan said.

He added that it was fitting for those who play and study together to pray together and expressed the hope that Holy Hours for students in Hornell would be held at regular intervals. He urged frequent assistance at the Sacrifire of the Mass as the best return to Christ for His love.

DIALOGUE prayers of adoration and thanksgiving were recited by the priests and the students. The entire congregation joined in the singing of Eucharistic hymns and for Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

Both high school and St. Ann's School students are being aided in a practical manner to attend daily Mass and receive Holy Communion.

As a convenience to the students, breakfast is served each weekday morning in the Pine Room of St. Ann's School. An average of 150 pupils are served daily. The project is being carried out during the Lenten season by older students of St. Ann's, under supervision of the priests of the parish.

DOINGS AT THE DALY'S

Living Lent

By Mary Tinley Daly

March is with us, and we're well into Lent. But is Lent into us?

By this time we've pretty well settled on the individual penitential roles we've chosen. The prickles on the hair shirt have begun to wear down a bit, and we find it keeping us warm in a protective sort of way.

Mary Daly

Particular "give-ups" have been publicly announced, or our immediate publics have observed what they are. So, added to the penance, there's a certain face-saving attached to seeing the whole thing through.

The writer of this column is, of course, taking the annual riding about "Live Lent and Like It" — subject of a magazine article written some years ago. Everybody who read that article has long since forgotten it — all but the members of our family.

Each Lent the quotes grow mode wide of the mark. (No editor would have published it in the gooey version it has now become!) "It's such fun to give up worldly pleasures!" somebody misquoted today, as I remarked casually that we hadn't seen a movie for six weeks. (Wish I'd kept a copy of that magazine.)

THROUGH THE fun-poking, though, there is a sense of united effort in living a good Lent. Since strict observance is lightened in recent years, it isn't hard to abide by the letter of the law and this imposes on each of us the desire to take on the one-step-further individual penances.

With the entire household geared to a more sedate and austere way of life, we find that helping one another observe a really holy season is mutually helpful. Along this line, we found especially punchy and appropriate the Epistle on the Sunday before Lent (1 Cor. 13, 1-13): "And now there remain faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

Helping others — strangers, acquaintances, friends, home folks — does add to the feeling of living a good Lent. At home we try to plan menus not throwing temptation into the way of those who have given up one or another article of diet, to provide a thoroughly adequate full meal that is truly satisfying; to establish an earlier peace-and-quiet at night, so that all will be rested and ready for daily Mass; to have meal time adjusted so that the greatest number possible are free to attend Wednesday and Friday night services.

In other words, to make Lent positive — and not just memory of a long fish season.

THERE IS one fish-addition to our Lenten menus — perhaps an old-timer to you but a mighty nourishing non-meat filler, as well as economical and easy. It's quick clam chowder and it comes in two versions:

1. Saute onions and celery in margerine (1 stick). Add a gallon of water (more or less), large can of tomatoes, cubed carrots and potatoes (these can be shredded to make it thicken quicker). Add salt and pepper, parsley flakes, celery flakes and thyme — rather strong thyme flavor if you like it. Just before serving, add canned clams (four cans for our family). Thicken if necessary and serve with crackers.

2. The other version is made with less water, no tomatoes and plenty of milk.

A cottage cheese and fruit salad and hot biscuits — and there you are! Or a tossed salad and a heavier dessert will fill out a mighty satisfying Lenten dinner. It's one of those easy menus that won't overburden the dishwashing department with a lot of pots and pans.

Of course, coming home from evening Lenten devotions and doing the dishes afterwards can be done — but probably it's not necessary to add that extra sacrifice in order to Live Lent and Like It!

'Look Up And Live' Program To Feature CU's Leo Brady

Leo Brady, teacher at Catholic University's School of Drama, Washington, D.C., and author of "Edge of Doom," will be guest on CBS Television's "Look Up and Live" on Sunday, March 11.

Program will be viewed in the Rochester area over WVET-TV (Channel 10) from 10:30 to 11 a.m.

After dramatization of a Clair Roskam playlet which analyzes Christian and humanitarian ethics in the theatre, Brady will discuss the stage portrayal of human values.

HIS PARTNER in the discussion will be the program's host, Msgr. John J. Dougherty of Immaculate Conception Seminary, Darlington, N. J.

Roskam's playlet will star Tom Carlin and Frances Stern Hagen.

The broadcast, part of the program's Catholic series, will be presented in cooperation with the National Council of Catholic Men.
