Don't Believe Olden Builder Was Better

Don't believe the old complaint that houses today aren't as good as they used to be. In most important respects they're much better. One example of the superiority of the modern house is the widespread use of preservative-treated millwork — windows, panel doors, and cabinets. Chemically treated millwork generally made of ponderosa pine, will last at least four or five times as long as the wood used in the so-called "golden age" of home building. Basically, preservatives do no harm. They poison the fungus that causes decay. They also reduce the absorption of moisture in wood. The ability to keep out moisture means that ponderosa pine windows and panel doors are free from sticking in any kind of weather. Sticking is caused when wood swells after absorbing moisture. Later, during dry weather, the wood shrinks. Preservative-treated wood, for all practical purposes, does not swell or shrink. Preservatives impart a wood's natural affinity for paint. They prevent paint failures such as bubbling, cracking, and peeling, which are caused by the presence of moisture beneath the painted surface.

Choosing the color of a new roof requires planning. The roof is the single most important factor in the exterior color scheme of a house. Roofs last for a long time. It is important that the homeowner be satisfied with the color of his roof long after the siding and trim colors are replaced. One of the best ways to select a roof color is to first select an overall color scheme for the house — roof, walls and trim. Then decide whether or not the roof color is flexible enough to harmonize with a second overall color scheme that you might choose some time in the future. If it is not, choose a new roof color that is compatible with both color schemes. Asphalt shingles come in a wide range of colors.
