New Idea—'Do-It-Together'

Man and wife team turns a do-it-yourself job of installing mineral wool insulation blankets into a "do-it-together" project. Mrs. Handyman helps speed the work by holding the blanket in place for Mr. Handyman's stapling gun. They're installing the mineral wool in their attic preparatory to finishing the space off for extra bedrooms. The insulation will keep heat inside in winter and outside in summer.

The smart housewife no longer simply dreams up jobs for her handyman husband to do around the house. Now she gets things done faster and has fun in the bargain by pitching in to help him.

That's the newest trend in the do-it-yourself movement. Land-ware and building materials dealers are reporting more and more women are buying tools and "handyman" materials and asking how to use them.

Wives are finding out that improvement projects are fun and can be even more enjoyable as "do-it-together" projects. Besides, the jobs are finished more quickly, and the wife experiences a feeling of accomplishment in having had a hand in them.

Women shouldn't try heavy work of tackle major projects alone. But they can be valuable assistants to their husbands in painting, papering walls, laying floor tile, building lawn furniture, installing bats and blankets of mineral wool insulation, and building patios and barbecues.

House in Scenic Setting Needs Walls of Windows

When a house is located in a picturesque setting, it's little short of a crime to block the view from inside with a blank wall.

That's what professional architects and builders are saying these days, and they're backing up their opinions by installing more and more walls of windows, both in new homes and in houses being modernized.

Walls of windows, besides bringing scenery into the house, also let more sunlight and air in and make the house look better from the outside.

Stock sash of ponderosa pine can be arranged into wide window areas in many ways. One of the most popular consists of two or three banks of fixed sash with awning or hopper windows here and there for ventilation.

Or when maximum ventilation is desired, the entire "wall" can be made of awning or hopper windows. Another method is to use casement or sliding windows side by side.

'Ribbon' Gives Privacy, Air

Two important requirements in a bedroom are plenty of ventilation and privacy. The arrangement in the sketch shows how to have both with awning windows of ponderosa pine.

This "ribbon" of windows is ideal for bedrooms because the awning style is hinged at the top and opens outward, making a tiny roof of glass which keeps out rain in case of a sudden storm. The ribbon usually is balanced by a double-hung or casement window on another wall.

A row of windows high in the wall also permits the use of greater wall space for furniture arrangement. And, according to the University of Illinois Small Homes Council, high windows permit sunlight to penetrate deeper into a room than do low windows.

Awning windows of ponderosa pine, or the sliding style often used, are available in various stock sizes, fully assembled and ready to install.

New Window Design Ousts Sash Weights

Sash weights have been made obsolete by advances in modern window design.

Most stock double-hung windows of ponderosa pine now are equipped with compact balances that make the windows look better and operate more easily.
