Sisters Bypassed In Movie Have Own Okinawa 'Stars'

By ROBERT SMETT

"The Teahouse of the August Moon," recent movie on life in Okinawa missed a good bet when the cameras bypassed five ladies in blue surrounded by slant-eyed small fry watching Hollywood star Marlon Brando "make like a native."

The five Sisters, who stopped for a moment in their work to watch procedures on the film set, were Daughters of Mary, Health of the Sick, first community of nuns to labor among the 700,000 souls of Okinawa.

TWO SISTERS of the missionary order, Sister Mary Lourdes and Sister Mary Beata, visiting Our Lady of Mercy High School in Rochester, this week, report that the many natives used as "extras" in filming the movie still carry themselves with the proud air of Hollywood stars.

One enterprising Okinawan, in true Hollywood style, opened his own teahouse on the island's busiest street, calling it—what else "The August Moon."

OKINAWA CHILDREN surround one of the missionary Sisters as they watch filming of the Movie "Teahouse of the August Moon." Many of the native youngsters acted as "extras" in the film.

But the Daughters of Mary have some "stars" of their own on Okinawa. One is Sister Annunciata, the only nun optometrist in the world (a Godsend to the naturally weak-eyed natives) who is equally adept at changing a truck tire or pumping cathedral-like music out of the small chapel organ.

ACCORDING TO Sister Mary Lourdes, the basic problem for the Sisters when they arrived at Okinawa in 1953 was learning how to manipulate chop sticks and to "sit like ladies." "Ladies" in Okinawa, Sister explained, squat on their heels and any other sitting position is frowned upon.

A young community, only twenty-two years old, the Daughters of Mary, Health of the Sick was founded by Father Edward Garesche, S.J. at Vista Maria, Cragsmoor, N.Y. At present there are 17 professed Sisters and 5 novices in the order in nursing, social service and catechetical work.

YOUNG ORDER founded in 1935 at Cragsmoor, N. Y., the Daughters of Mary, Health of the Sick wear blue habit and veil. Sister Mary Lourdes (above left) and Sister Mary Beata visited Rochester this week.

The Sisters wear an attractively designed habit of blue wool with a blue veil and white bone rosaries at the waist.
