

DOINGS AT THE DALY'S

As a long distance telephone operator for the summer, our Mary has joined the circle of girls who have, for a long time, been trying to locate another girl named Evangelina.

Three years ago the man—Gabriel—met a girl he could not forget. However, before he had a chance to date her the family moved away.

Then began the long, long search. Each weekend Gabriel would make seemingly useless calls, starting via long distance, with the bigger cities of the country: New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Baltimore, San Francisco, Los Angeles—all down the line.

EVERY TIME the girls in the telephone exchange would find the father's name in one of the larger cities there was renewed hope in their hearts, and then:

"We have a man by that name on the line, sir," they would report, with pity in their voices, "but there is no Evangelina at that address. I'm sorry, sir, awfully sorry. Better luck next time!"

And so the dragnet went on, weekend after weekend, year after year. It was never the family with a girl named Evangelina.

What was the father's business? Gabriel didn't know. He and the family could have moved anywhere. He had lived in a big city, where the two had met, so presumably, Gabriel reasoned, he had not moved to a farm. Yet he might have retired...

After a searchlight survey of the largest metropolitan centers, Gabriel started on cities of lesser population: Wilmington, Newark, Kalamazoo, Omaha, both Chicago and...
