Catholic Theatre's 'The Lark'

By RAMLPH V-VATKINS

Religious Orders

On the face of it, Joan of Arcis a preposterous story, fantastic fairy-tale told by grandmothers to children. An dolescent girl comes off the farms of France 500 years ago. A peasant's daughter, lowborn - and uneducated, she makes her the dialogue with the military way to absolute leadership of a commandant. De Beaudricourt, French fighting force, whips an whom Joan alternately leases English army twice its size, and like a coquette and puzzles with crowns the king in Rheims ca her fervor. The hig hlight of the evening If such an outlandish sequence lay, perhaps, in the confrontation of events did happen, it would be of Joan and Charles, the Dauphin virtually unbelievable. It is cer. of France. tainly more than human. That, Outstancling im the cast were obviously, is one of the reasons Ron Pedrone as Warwick; Frank why Joan today is a saint and Riesenberger as Cauchon, the why her dramatic image has cap kindly man of the church who tivated first rate playwrights. understankis Joan as well as what

That, too, is why the contern he feels is his cauty; and Eugene porary stage is almost gluttled Eckert as De Beaudricourt, the with Joans, because we still can't strapping man of the world who understand it. The whole episode is pretty well familiarnmed by a is wonderful and ridiculous at teenage girl. the same time.

JEAN ANOUILIES "The Lark" duction of "The Lark" was well which was excellently done by directed by Williord Scott, and the Catholic Theatre of Roches sets and lightiming by Carl (Zollo ter last week, is another attempt and his assist ants caught the to account for Joan of Arc, to play's mesoded the "plow and the make her real as a person di stars" in a French town five vinely inspired who did great centuries ago.

It is not only a problem for gan Jean Cruttendern, Marjorie the author, but also for the ac-

Joy Pedrone played Joan well. with deliberate restraint, an emphasis on the voices Joan hears in the fields, and the ary, ethereal character of her protivation This is all very fitting in terms of many lines in "The Lack

There are also scenes in which ness, who says to a diffy foot soldier, "You have all the smells a man should have " or in a milltary reminiscence to her churchly inquisitors, "We had fine bat tles together. It was good to ride hoot to boot in the dawn"

THE PART IS hard to play be cause the Joan of "The Lark" is completely human, yet touched with great power. Anouilh's heroine becomes wonderfully real precisely at those times when her mission and her natural manner isms join forces, in, for example of
