

Retired Clyde Priest

Missions Everybody's Business

One of the most mission-minded priests of the Rochester Diocese is Monsignor Joseph V. Curtin, retired pastor of St. John the Evangelist Church, Clyde.

The veteran pastor, forced by advancing age and ill health to retire from active duty this past June, still urges callers at the Clyde rectory to "say a prayer for the missions."

His study is piled with mission books and magazines. Curious and trinkets sent him from grateful missionaries decorate the mantle and bookcases.

IN ROCHESTER, Propagation of the Faith Society officials report he has personally supported a score of native seminarians in mission outposts enabling them to complete studies for the priesthood.

His parishioners at St. John the Evangelist Church, Clyde's only Catholic church, hold an enviable record, one that tops many larger parishes, in contributions to the missions, according to the Propagation reports.

Typical of the near thirty years Monsignor Curtin served as pastor at Clyde is the mission report for 1936. In that year, Clyde's 300 Catholic families sent over $3,000 to the Propagation of the Faith Society.

Children in St. John's parochial school caught the pastor's mission spirit and saved pennies to ransom 25 pagan babies through the Holy Childhood orphan and program.

BESIDES THESE reported contributions, said Father Paul J. Cuddy, present pastor of St. John's, there are unrecorded do-

He organized the Catholic Students Mission Crusade, a mission club still flourishing at both St. Andrew's and St. Bernard's Seminaries.

He met seminarians with his familiar question, "Want a good book?"

Students, always anxious to please a professor, would then be given one of the latest mission publications.

FATHER CUDDY reports his own interest in the Church's mission activities dates from his days as a student under Monsignor Curtin.

As a seminary professor, Monsignor Curtin helped organize the Charles Settlement House on Jay Street, in the present St. Francis of Assisi parish Seminary, where he still recalls his after school hikes to the Charles House, his pockets bulging with Rosaries, to teach catechism to children of Italian immigrants and help the newcomers adjust to the American way of life.

He is no longer able to celebrate Mass every day but he assists at Mass in the village church he has served since 1929.

"And I try to make a visit to our Lord in the Blessed Sacrament later in the day," he said, "to pray for the missions."

"By the way," he added, "here's a good book. It's about the White Fathers in Africa."

Monsignor Curtin you see is still a missionary at heart.

"A good share of these donations," said Father Cuddy, "are right from the Monsignor's own wallet."

Monsignor Curtin added "Well if I ask the people to give to the missions, I guess I should give too."

Asked if all his parishioners shared his missionary outlook, he stated quite emphatically, "Every real Catholic is interested in the missions!"

His missionary reputation began during his days as history and literature professor at St. Andrew's Seminary, then located

Post Office Nabs Charity Racketeer

Washington, D. C. — (RNS) — Post Office Department inspectors put such a quick stop to a fake Catholic charity that the promoter was able to take in only $800 from his mail solicitation before he was halted into federal court to face charges of using the mails to defraud.

The department identified the promoter as Julius D. Kahn of San Jose, Calif. They said that using the name "The Handicapped Brothers of St. Jude Thaddeus," Kahn was mailing letters containing a small Crucifix and chain and asking for donations.

Upon ascertaining that the charitable organization was non-existent, postal inspectors quickly arrested Kahn and blocked his mail.

Chief Inspector D. H. Stephens made the disclosure in a special report to Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield concerning policing of the Christmas mails.

Rebirth

By MARGENE BETTS

The February gusts blow round

To meet the shuddering cold of dawn.

The earth in winter's grasp is bound.

With autumn's blazing beauty gone.

But every March the sun comes back

To warm the earth and hearts of men.

When April's green replaces blackened

Snow, the miracle of life begins again.
