

Catholic College Critics Disputed

New York — (NC) — The past president of Fordham University characterized as "unfortunate" statements by three Catholic educators whose criticisms of Catholic higher education have attracted wide publicity.

FATHER ROBERT I. Gannon, S.J., now pastor of St. Ignace Loyola Church here, told the Manhattan College Alumni Association that "excessive self-abasement" among Catholic educators and journalists has been a result of the charges.

The criticism of Catholic Colleges, said the Jesuit, "was based on the supposed existence of a vast complacency in responsible quarters which had to be violently upset."

FATHER GANNON 'man bites dog'

"I can only say that if such vast complacency exists, I never encountered it in my 28 years of educational administration," said Jesuit Father Gannon.

THE SPEAKER referred directly to statements in 1953 by Monsignor John Tracy Ellis, professor of history at Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C., and to "recent revivals of his thesis" by Jesuit Father Gustave Weigel, theologian at Woodstock (Md.) Jesuit Seminary, and Holy Cross Father John J. Cavanaugh, former president of Notre Dame University.

All three have charged that Catholics are not producing their share of intellectuals and the fault lies in Catholic higher education.

Father Gannon said their talks were unfortunate in varying degrees, particularly since they were written in a crusading fervor which led their authors into verbal indiscretions that made for wide publicity, but left enduring scars and many misunderstandings.

"The secular press opened its columns to all three critics," he continued. "Understandably it was news. The man was biting the dog. Only the caustic and racy paragraphs, however, reached the market place with the result that unwarranted impressions exist this day in many circles."

FATHER GANNON said that Monsignor Ellis' point that "we are not producing our share of research men who published their advances in learned magazines . . . is well made, but the overtones filtering down to the man in the street left him with the unfortunate impression that the education obtained in Catholic colleges was of a distinctly inferior brand."

After Father Gannon's address, Brother Augustine Phillip, president of Manhattan College, which is conducted by the Christian Brothers, said that "all the breathers bewailing the shortcomings of Catholic higher education truly need the perspective that Father Gannon has brought to this issue tonight."

London — (NC) — A British military man who serves Mass practically every day has been appointed to the highest post in his country's army.

Gen. Sir Francis Festing, 55, was appointed Chief of the Imperial General Staff, making him top officer in the British Army.

AS reported last week, Arthur G. Trudeau, new head of the U.S. Army's missile development program, attends daily Mass. As commanding general during the past year of the First U.S. Army Corps in Korea, he was present every morning at the seven o'clock Mass.

GEN. FESTING, who is a convert to the Church, will not assume his duties until next September when the present chief, Field Marshal Sir Gerald Templer, retires.

Born into a non-Catholic family of Dublin, Gen. Festing's father and grandfather were British Army officers. The general was received into the Church while still in his teens, and has long been noted in British army circles for his exemplary life as a Catholic. Part of Gen. Festing's daily activities includes attending Mass, which he usually serves.

DURING WORLD WAR II, when he was one of the country's youngest generals, he distinguished himself during the Burma campaign.

Gen. Festing has four sons, who attend the Benedictine Fathers' school at Ampleforth abbey.

His many international decorations include that of Commander in the U.S. Legion of Merit.

Singapore (NC) — When General Sir Francis Festing, newly appointed Chief of the British Imperial General Staff, was informed that a priest here would say Mass for success in his new post, the general immediately asked if he might serve the Mass.
