DOINGS AT THE DALY'S

Every household is redecorated periodically, we find. And if you don't set a deadline, you're sunk. Our deadline approaches and we beat it, for once. THE PAINT IS OFF THE FIREPLACE! April 20th, we had agreed, would see the bricks restored to their pristine rug-gedness and we'd "go early American" in the living room or the fireplace would be repainted and we'd return to our hodge-podge of mid-everything period.

We shudder to think of the tons of energy expended on the project, largely by Pat, who in the process evoked a brick-restorer combination which only she could describe. Its chief component, as we saw it, was elbow grease. However, that first evening when we looked around the once-familiar living room, its rug rolled up, furniture placed firmly around the walls, we were taken slightly aback. We had taken the plunge.

EARLY AMERICAN that room has got to be. One gets the instinctive impression, from viewing the dominating fireplace, that the early settlers could come and make themselves right at home, roasting meats, baking bread, warming their chilled bodies.

Now for step two. Certainly the Oriental rug isn't appropriate. It's historic, that's for sure, but into the dining room it goes. We remembered, too, how years later when the rug was rolled up for its summer stay in the basement, Johnny had propped his ten-gallon fish tank against it.

That was the summer he was nine and started his first business venture by "boarding" gold fish for the neighbors while they were away on vacation. Ten cents a week, as we recall, or two-forty-five at "The Gold Fish Hotel," and we thought he was quite the budding businessman.

We thought so until fall, that is, when we unrolled the rug and found that there had been a crock in the back of the tank. . . . You guessed it—a big piece of mold that had to be cut out of the once-impressive rug. Johnny's rental system, netting him $3.75, had cost us $150.

Then the other furniture, of no particular period; the couch and chair, inherited and done over and over, the two wedding present chairs from folks whose tastes were the antithesis of each other.

NEXT, THE wobbly mahogany drop-leaf table and the table we'd "antiqued" when the car was on for white paint-and-burnt-umber. Messy. And the coffee table, for which we have sentiment, but no real use. Presented on our wooden wedding anniversary by the Head of the House, it was our pride and joy.

Set on high legs, it was the size and style of the '30's. Around its top had been a beautiful pie-crust edging, perfect for small boys and girls to use as a boat. Such sailing adventures, and the table when overturned serving as a sort of considerably weakened that pie-crust edge—split it, as a matter of fact, and eventually necessitated its removal.

Also, in one of our modernization ventures, we had cut down the legs. Now the once precious fifth anniversary gift is nothing but a what-is-it.

Piano, two chairs and lamps are O.K., and thus ends the inventory. So like the patriarchs of old, and with a "We-sho-are-about-to-die-salute-you" gesture, we called in all the children—and wrote the same to Eileen: "Any thing you want, you may have."

Had we expected a keen scramble, we'd have been disappointed. "Maybe the blue chair would do in my upstairs den," Johnny spoke up—perhaps just to save our feelings. "I might like the drop-leaf table," Pat added. "Still, I don't know."

A murmured "No, thanks," from Mary and a whispered consultation between Markie and Ginny, the tenor of which was "I want to furnish my house from scratch when I get married."

Well, to be realistic, we had had the same sentiments—only it has taken us until now even to approach the realization of that ambition. Always, there was something else—school bills, medical bills, etc.—to take precedence over furniture. Maybe it's more fun that way?

Used Furniture, Anyone?

Church Receives Entire Family

RESULTING from the Religious Inquiry Class conducted by the Rev. Chester M. Kloczek at St. Stanislaus School, 10 people were received into the Church. Among the 10 was the Benza family comprising five members. They are: from left, John Benza Sr., Dorothy Smith Benza, with Father Kloczek, Edward B. Belski, sponsor, and Little Dale Andrew Benza; in front, sons of Mr. and Mrs. John Benza, John Jr. and Wayne Michael. Five others received were Alfo Bakewell, Helena Czerwinski and Nancy M. Staszczak.

Role Of The Laity

The role of the laity in Catholic life is a responsibility in the work of Redemption; he is a sharer in it by baptism and the baptismal character by the character of vocation, and by the explicit command of our Lord he is obliged to give testimony of his love for his religion, by extending the Kingdom of God to include all men. "It today," said our Holy Father Pope Pius XII to the Second World Congress of the Lay Apostolate, "the consciousness of the lay apostolate is an aspect of the most widely used, when one speaks of the activity of the Church. It is because of the collaboration of the laity with the hierarchy has never been so necessary as now."

Among Women

Every one of the faithful has a responsibility in the work of Redemption; he is a sharer in it by baptism and the baptismal character by the character of vocation, and by the explicit command of our Lord he is obliged to give testimony of his love for his religion, by extending the Kingdom of God to include all men. "It today," said our Holy Father Pope Pius XII to the Second World Congress of the Lay Apostolate, "the consciousness of the lay apostolate is an aspect of the most widely used, when one speaks of the activity of the Church. It is because of the collaboration of the laity with the hierarchy has never been so necessary as now."
