AMONG WOMEN Vandalism

By Mary Lennon Snyder

One woman's thoughts on the problem of vandalism appear in the current issue of The Torch.

At every problem of this sort, there is the danger of over-simplification in discussing the lawlessness evidenced by many young people today.

The author, Mrs. Snyder, recognizes this in her introductory remarks: "Now when all the experts find it hard to get at the underlying reasons for this wave of rebellion among the adolescents of the country, certainly one would be very rash indeed to suggest that there are too many factors involved."

However it does seem that some of the things we have been doing to combat vandalism and other types of juvenile lawlessness, seem to be actually encouraging it. I refer to the following practices:

"BLAMING the parents. This has become such a popular indoor sport that in many cases when Junior breaks a window, the law enforcement agencies don't even bother to question him but immediately drag his poor father and mother into court to see where they are falling as parents."

"Now while there are undoubtedly many circumstances where parents are negligent, by and large most parents are doing their damndest to see that their child is a better edition of themselves. It's getting so that children use the threat of delinquency over their parents as a lever, knowing that it's the parents who pay. Let's stop putting too much emphasis on the parent's responsibility and let the child bear the brunt of his own wrong-doing."

Another thing Mrs. Hinman would like to see changed is "too many extra-curricular activities."

cubes into the pitcher of food tea. "Well, maybe when St. John said that he wasn't worthy to touch the hem of his garment, how's it go? Wait a minute, Ginny." Frank put down the pitcher, leaned against the sink and thought. "Here you are, Ginny. 'He it is who is to come after me. Who has been set above me, the strap of whose sandals I am not worthy to loose.' That might not be just right, Ginny, but it comes sometime in Advent. Let's see if I can find it."

So Ginny now had two research artists doing her homework—one on the missal, the other on the New Testament.

During the process, we glared menacingly toward the studious bunch in the breakfast alcove as Ginny's eyes carefully avoided ours. Our telegraphic message, "This won't educate Ginny" as caught by the eyes of her benefactors was evidently interpreted as "Thanks for helping Ginny."

"I never had anybody do my homework in the seventh grade," Marjie grinned with a whisper. "But more power to her if she can get away with it!"

By the time dinner was served, Ginny and her research staff had the lesson well in hand.

When dessert was brought on, Ginny sighed, "I thought it would be Mom's angelfood-strawberry cream. And it's so good to know I've finished my homework!"

DOINGS AT THE DALY'S The Lord Helps Those...

By Mary Tinley Daly

Now approacheth the final days when the school year will have been accomplished. And who, we wonder, will be the most happy the pupils—or the parents?

We find ourselves lapsing into quasi-Biblical terminology because of an incident this very evening.

"Oh, I've got to wash homework!" Seventh grader Ginny groaned. "Sister made us take 15 virtues—fifteen and find places in the New Testament where they're shown."

Personally, we thought this a very fine, intelligent piece of homework, requiring research, application and reacquaintance with the Gospels.

But, we were not about to give too much help. This was a challenge.

AS WE STARTED Sunday dinner, our would-be student ensconced herself at the breakfast alcove table, twined bobby soxed ankles around the chair legs, chewed her pencil, riffled through the pages of the Missal and the New Testament and wondered, "Now, where'd you find about obedience in the New Testament?"

That was easy—even for us. So, pounding flour into the Swiss steak, we decided to prime the pump of scholarship in our youngest and suggested that she look for the Gospel where Jesus was found in the temple.

"Along about Epiphany time." We ran a floury finger through the New Testament and found it—first Saturday after Epiphany. "And He went down with them and came to Nazareth, and was subject to them."

the child fit more happily into the family circle. It is an interesting article with which one need not agree completely, but which does cause a parent to re-examine some of the problems facing our youth in today's community.
