Holes for poles
... electric poles, that is. You see, this man is Richard H. Vaisey of the Rochester Gas and Electric's Line Maintenance Department. The machine he's operating is called a "pothole digger." When the hole has been dug, a new wooden pole, specially treated to resist rotting, is placed in it. Then, of course, electric lines are strung on the pole to carry electricity "for better living" to new homes in the area. It's another step in bringing you low-cost, dependable electric service... the biggest bargain in your family budget.
