

DOINGS AT THE DALY'S

By Mary Thiney Daly

Indigestion "The people next door sure must be poor," Larry told his mother. "Their baby swallowed a nickel, and from the fuss they made you'd think it was a hundred dollars!"

By peculiar coincidence, three letters arrived at our house this week from different parts of the country but all with the same tenor:

Mary Daly

"I just wish you'd try to write about our house," wrote a woman from Pennsylvania. "We're having a heck of a time getting along. My husband has been in hospital three of the kids are sick. Family life is hard!"

From a reader in Virginia: "You make raising a family sound like the proverbial duck soup. Maybe your family is ideal, but we have troubles."

And from Canada: "Doesn't anything ever go wrong at your house? It sure does at ours. This has been a day. We've just learned that our oldest boy has eye trouble and will probably always have to wear glasses. My mother-in-law is coming next week to 'make her home with us' and the four little ones have measles, and one of 'em had chickenpox already. Now, how would you cope with that?"

The postscript to the letter showed that this mother could "cope." "P.S." she wrote, "I feel better just getting it all out on paper. The Lord will give me strength. Guess the old saying about the backs and burdens will prove itself out. O.K.?"

O.K. WE SAY to our friend in Canada, thank her for her letter and for reminding us of the adage that "The Lord strengthens the back to bear the burden."

We're grateful, too, for the letters from Pennsylvania and Virginia.

Perhaps we have been a little too la-de-da in the past few columns, a Pollyannishness which, we must confess, was a mere whistling before the wind.

There is one intention for which we'd be mighty grateful for the prayers of readers.

For some months now we have been faced with the fact that our 19-year-old Mary must undergo complicated surgery for a serious back ailment. Under the care of an orthopedic surgeon since Christians, she has been in almost constant pain but has put off surgery until completion of freshman year in college. Now, the date of the operation has been set.

The Lord Strengthens

Mary herself is anxious only to have it over and comments cheerfully, "I'm so awfully lucky that it's fixable!"

The doctor calls the condition "formidable" but he and his patient are calm and realistic. We try to be the same way. Perhaps, if we seem to stress the light, the frivolous, we're trying too hard to hang onto the "gift of laughter."

IN A FAMILY column such as this, even a weekly description of what goes on in an ordinary—not an ideal—Catholic family, we believe should not be too much of an airing of troubles. There are enough woes in the news sections and in the "agony columns" with their "Dear Ann," "Dear Abby," "Dear Mary—Howorth."

And there are troubles and problems all about us. We hear them over the luncheon table, at parties, in the supermarket, over the telephone, the radio and TV. And think what Father must hear at his "box party" every Saturday afternoon and evening! Troubles as well as confessions are poured into his ear and he gives kindly advice as well as absolution.

There's comfort in the mere telling of troubles—as the lady from Canada found—and a therapeutic value in the discussion of problems that relieves tension. Though the listener can not always come up with a solution, very often the mere with the problem can see a ray of light through the clouds.

"Was ever thus. Even back in Biblical times, we find, 'Bear ye one another's burdens.'"

And so, to our Canadian friend, "I feel better just getting the whole thing down on paper."

AMONG WOMEN The Wonder Worker

By Mary Lennon Snyder

Today, the Church celebrates the Sacred Heart of Jesus which falls this year on the day ordinarily celebrated as the feast day of St. Anthony of Padua.

Although this saint, St. Anthony, is named after the Wonder Worker, he has come to be many things to many people. I believe he has a special message in this month of June which marks the termination of the school year.

To some pious mortals St. Anthony appears to be a sort of celestial retriever. For over seven centuries he has been besought to help in many ways, frequently to find lost articles—sometimes trivial, often precious; and such is his generous nature that prayers to him do often result in recovery of the lost articles.

To others, St. Anthony is a sort of dignified matrimonial agent. There are many who believe that St. Anthony is a highly successful match maker.

However, it seems to me that St. Anthony has a special message for the educated person, because St. Anthony exemplified in his own lifetime all that is most admirable in a scholar. He was devoted to truth, yet in his dedication he was humble and selfless.

The man who is known to us as St. Anthony of Padua was born Ferdinand de Bouillon, a descendant of a family distinguished by nobility and by its services in the Crusades. Entering religious life at the age of fifteen he soon attained a reputation for holiness and learning.

ALTHOUGH young Ferdinand had started his life in religion among the Canons Regular of St. Augustine, he received permission to join the Franciscan Order and there in 1220 received the name of Anthony by which he is everywhere revered.

We are told that he had been initially attracted to the Franciscan Order because of his desire to share in their missionary work. Having been disappointed in this missionary ambition, he worked quietly and effectively as his superiors indicated.

He sought no special honors because of his brilliance, which for some time he was able to conceal as a member of the new order. In fact, we read that at the General Chapter of the Franciscans in 1221 no superior wanted to take him because of his emaciated condition. He was completely disregarded until at last the Provincial of Romagna consented to take him and place him in a small community.

WE ARE impressed with the humility of this brilliant scholar and preacher; and since comparisons are often said to be odious, we shall make none.

Since the haughty rich man is often dubbed with the epithet, "proud," it sometimes think the expression "brain proud" could be used to describe certain educated people. Surely such an attitude is revealed in all its shallowness as we think of such humble and brilliant men as St. Anthony of Padua.

In this month of June we might ask St. Anthony to intercede for the young people who are leaving school with their formal schooling completed, that they will be endowed with the spiritual and mental qualities which characterize the individual as a scholar and a man of God.

However, it seems to me that St. Anthony has a special message for the educated person, because St. Anthony exemplified in his own lifetime all that is most admirable in a scholar. He was devoted to truth, yet in his dedication he was humble and selfless.
