What Should Godparents Do When Parents Are Negligent In Religion?

By FATHER JOHN L. THOMAS, S.J.

Assistant Professor of Sociology at St. Louis University

I'm terribly worried shout the religious training of one of goldchildren. She's my other's thild, aged seven, and the oldest of three. My brother is very careless about religion. His wife is non-Catholic, an excellent mother but indifferent toward all faiths. When we visit them, they are evasive about the religious training of the children. They know their obligations in this regard, but I'm straid they do nothing, What can I do?

You are to be commended, Mary, for taking the duties of sponsorship seriously.

Some sponsors forget that they have a serious obligation to look after the Christian education and spiritual training of their spiritual children. Of course, the care of children falls principally upon parents. When they neglect their duties, however, sponsors must do what they can to assure the religious instruction and formation of their godehildren.

This is the situation which confronts you now, Mary. It is clearly not an easy one to handle. Your obligations both as sportsor and near relative are clear.

THE QUESTION is, what can you. a mere "outsider" do to fulfill them? Your problem is further complicated by the fact that you do not live very near your brother's family so that it is difficult to learn what religious training the children receive.

Under the circumstances, I would suggest the following ap-

As you say, she is an excellent mother, but since she does not personally appreciale the need for religion, she may well resent any outside advice or interference. She knows her obligations, yet because of her own views, she isn't going to to do much about carrying them out as you feel she

In this situation, perhaps the best you can do is to avoid antagonizing her, lest in selfdefense she takes a definite stand against religion and communicates this attitude to her children.
