Georgetown Experiment

Medical School
Without Medicine

Blue Ridge Summit, Pa. — (RNS) — More than a score of medical students from Georgetown University, Washington, D.C., are trying a unique experiment here to determine whether a medical school could be conducted without any facilities.

The students, sophomores in the Georgetown College of Medicine, are meeting in a Jesuit retreat house, Bellarmine Hall, to find out how medical education might continue in the event a national disaster wiped out major hospitals and medical training centers, nearly all of which are located in the heart of large cities.

They are trying to answer the question of whether it would be feasible to conduct medical classes at Bellarmine Hall if a national disaster destroyed their own campus and that alterations might be required to a building such as this to fit it for emergency use. They will also try to find out what alterations might have to be made in the medical college curriculum.

Dubbed Operation Hilltop the experiment will determine if other "bombed-out" medical schools could be housed at the Jesuit retreat home, as well as Georgetown's students.

Movies, TV, Radio
Smut Worsens

Albany — (NC) — The "motion picture problem" will be studied in November public hearings by the New York State legislature's Joint Legislative Committee on the Prohibition and Dissemination of Obscene Material.

In its annual report the committee charged that it has found "motion pictures and motion picture advertising spreading every kind of monstrosity before our youngsters in action and in color."

The committee declared it is "amazed to see the extent to which sex and immorality are being exploited and sensationalized in advertisements plastered throughout our cities and accepted and displayed by reputable news media."

There have been improvements in the moral tone of comic books, the committee said, but it noted that "sex and girlie magazines" continue to have widespread distribution.

"IF WE ARE going to solve our obscenity problems," the committee concluded, "we need a great deal more legislation, more rigid enforcement and more help from the courts."

The committee also asserted that "there are few television programs . . . which are not spoiled by the injection of large doses of violence, cruelty and brutality."

Soviets Admit Religion Gains

Moscow — (RNS) — Problems of Philosophy, leading Russian philosophical magazine, here, admitted in an article that there is a "partial revival of religion in the Soviet Union" and called for "more subtle and vigorous" atheistic propaganda.

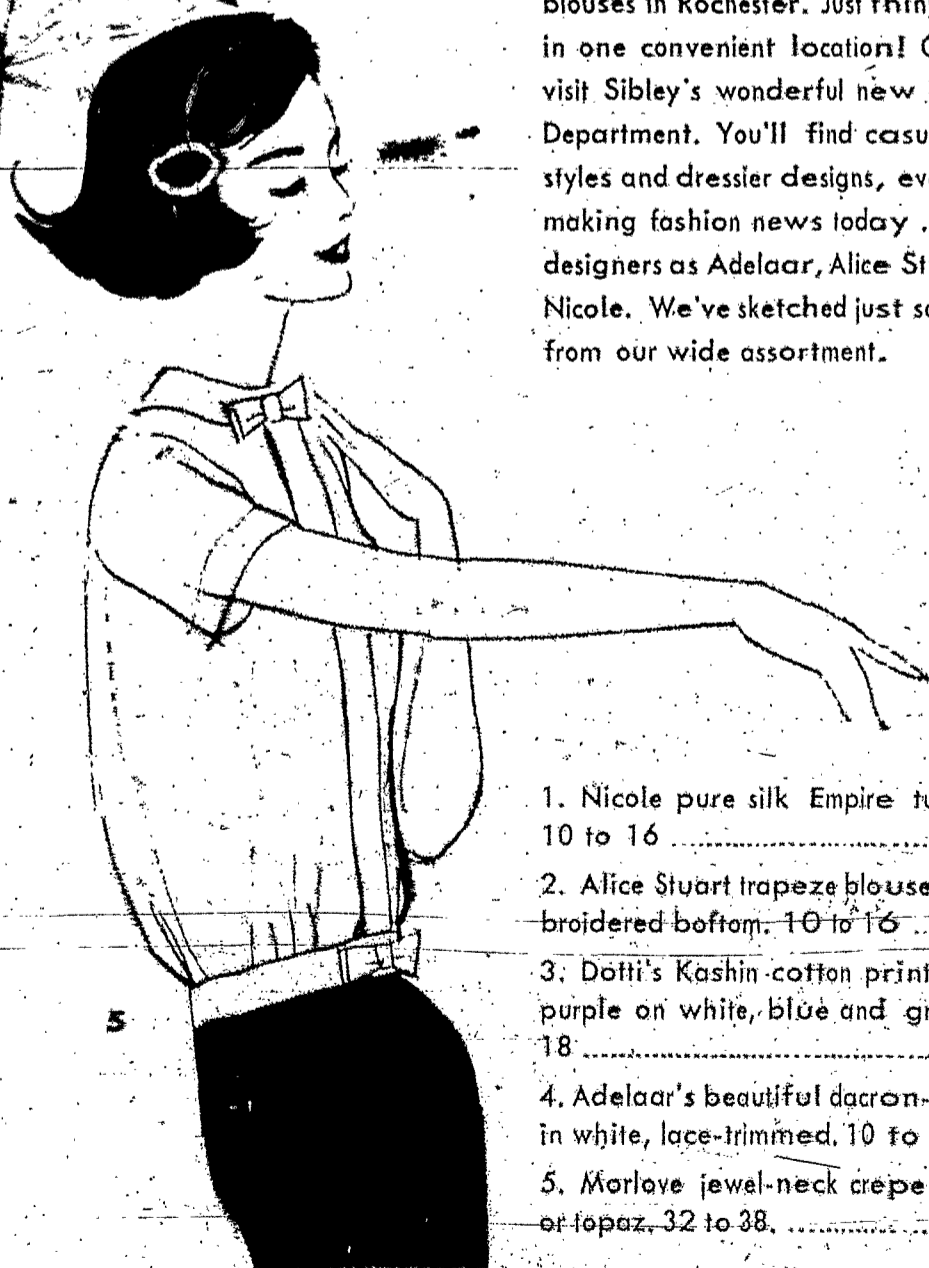

In a three-page attack on religion, the publication contended that the revival was due to the "influence of the capitalist world" and must be fought with anti-religious lectures, films and other media.

It added that "mankind will reach peace by the struggle of the masses against the imperialists and not through a religious outlook saturated with pacifism."
