

Bewitched, Bewildered, And Boring

By RAY SMITH. "BELL, BOOK, AND CANDLE" comes to the Paramount Theater this week as a romantic fantasy developed from the late John Van Druten's gentle comedy.

James Stewart and Kim Novak are the top names on the bill and this team will attract ADULTS to this adults ONLY picture.

Kim starts the farce as a young woman who sells primitive African art. You wonder how she makes a living as I can remember only seeing a few customers increasing their collections or head-hunting equipment.

O well, that's business. Back to our tea-leaves. She is really a witch who has designs on Jim Stewart.

and casts him under a spell. If you think it sounds nuts, up to you, keep reading. Elsa Lancaster, as Kim's aunt, is a minor witch who uses her limited talent irresponsibly, opening locked doors and hexing telephones. Jack Lemmon, boring player at the Zodiac club, acts a little boyish fun messing traffic lights—and setting horns in parked cars to blowing.

Ernie Kovacs, as the author of unknown tales on witchcraft, gave this reviewer a few good laughs. He plays the free-lancer who is ready to interrupt anything to have a drink. Maybe he hit the audience so well because all of us have one or two friends of whom he was the caricature.

The biggest laugh was that of Jimmie Stewart's expressions when he is made to drink some gummy joy juice in an attempt to escape the witch's spell. To say the least, it doesn't look too delicious, UGH!

As you might suspect, just before this 103 minute film comes to a happy ending, Kim blushes and wags. Two things witches can't do and Jimmie takes her in his arms happy she is a human being.

Although the above may seem hilarious funny, the movie left me cool. Or in plain English, it was boring. Maybe it's just I can't see the dove type of humor. The few laughs don't equal the advertisements of this comedy. So concerning BEC, I rest my case. ADULTS of the jury, what do you think! "PARTY GIRL" brings two of MGM's top stars to the Loew's Theater in a film which doesn't offer too much as good entertainment.

Robert Taylor plays the successful courtroom mouthpiece for Lee J. Cobb, an underworld ruler of Chicago in the roaring '30s. Cyd Charisse, as a night club showgirl, feels sorry for Taylor when she hears the story of his crippled leg and his selfish estranged wife. With this tear-seeking combination (Where's my towel?), they fall in love. This theme, joined with a few dance specialties by Miss Charisse, makes this gangster-speak easy-hidden film OBJECTIONABLE FOR ALL.

The acting of some, deserve mention, especially of Lee J. Cobb. Sentimental and sinister, he keeps up suspense with his moody orders for personal-murder or wholesale murder. John Ireland and Corey Allen are perfectly cast as vicious gunmen.

The program is carried on WMBD, 1340 on the dial in Auburn. "Action Was Limited" is the story of an exciting and tragic episode in the lives of a small group of American soldiers on patrol duty in Korea. As the state-side news reporters broadcast their daily news announcements, stating that things were slow on the Korean front, and that "action was limited today," we go behind the scenes and follow the small patrol through an experience of unlimited action.

Water Shortage Threatens Cathedral

Venice — (NC) — The great golden Basilica of St. Mark's which is literally surrounded by the sea has the experts worried because there is not an adequate water supply in case of fire. Although like everything else in Venice St. Mark's stands on an island crisscrossed by canals, new water pipes are being laid in the square. The church and most of the nearby historic buildings are of stone but there is still enough wood in various parts of the structures to make the threat of fire serious. At the same time the many-domed Byzantine church is undergoing extensive repairs both inside and out. Many of the 11th century mosaics near the sanctuary of the church have been removed and then replaced piece by piece after the underwall had been reinforced and strengthened. These restorations are still in progress and probably will be so for more than a year. Investigation has proved the foundations of the church to be sound. First built in the 8th century then added to and modified in the following centuries, the church rests on pillars sunk into the sea and filled with earth, as do almost all the buildings of the city. Restorers have found serious cracks in some of the columns of the atrium or front porch. Future reinforcement is indicated for the vaults, pillars and arches of the church.

Our Second Mothers

By Mary Lennon Snyder. Of the many statements attributed to Abraham Lincoln, few strike a more responsive chord than his generous, "All that I am or ever hope to be, I owe to my Angel Mother." As children, we are thrilled to the quotation because it clothe in words our lamently inarticulate feckless infancy. Mrs. Snyder says, as adults, hearing those words, we wonder if we have ever adequately expressed to our parents the loving gratitude we acknowledge we owe them. For many of us death has taken the opportunity of thanking our parents, of expressing even in little material ways, our grateful love; however, we remember them in our prayers and they are always in our hearts. THERE ARE, however, women living among us who are in a sense, "Other Mothers" or second mothers to us. Under the customs of our society they took us in our early years and patiently worked to shape our minds and hearts into those of good Catholic men and women. I refer, of course, to the teaching Sisters who instructed us in our wifely youth. In a day when grade classes were so heterogeneously grouped that almost any classroom was a conglomeration in instructional problems, they worked patiently to bring out the best in each of us. Each of us would gladly make any sacrifice no matter how great to make more comfortable the remaining earthly life of our own mothers. In the same line of reasoning, we should be willing to help each in her own way and according to her own conscience, to help in the building of the infirmary for the aged and sick nuns, our second mothers, who once gave of their youth and strength to start us on our life's way. TAKE ANY one parish and consider the number of boys and girls who have come under the instruction of the Sisters. Think of the wonderful teaching given in that school. Pick out several young people who by extra help and encouragement and supervision have been assisted to go on to higher schools of learning, to win scholarships and financial assistance because of their good educational background. To provide facilities for care of such dedicated teachers is a debt of justice. We all owe that debt. Those who are in circumstances to be generous should be so; practically everyone can make some sort of gift; and those who are unable to contribute financial-
