Among Women School Days

WE MOTHERS have been the unwitting perpetrators of a very bad public relations program in not making clear why we are glad to see school reopen.

Perhaps I do not speak for all mothers, but I know that I speak for many when I say that all mothers are not glad to see school reopen because they are delighted to be rid of the noise and confusion about the house.

So, like many mothers, I am not glad that school re-opens because I want to push my duties off on a teacher. I miss having my young friend around; I miss my frequently inept but ever willing helpers.

At Our House The High Road

By MARY TINLEY DALY

The question of "the high road" vs. "the low road" is a controversial one at our house. Recent journey was no exception.

Perhaps I sounded off a bit too shrilly, in anticipation of this hollow honor. Conscientiously, the Head of the House followed the green lines the man had craved, indicating streets that "get you out of town in a hurry."

HOW COULD he have known what was on the tip of my tongue? Just from having heard it for twenty-some years? Two hours of humming along; shift of drivers, another two hours, another highway, EXIT 18 two miles to the right.

NEEDLESS TO say, it was far past noon before we left our Exit 6 adopted town. "Highway for while," the Head of the House suggested. You're right. It gets you further, faster.

So we highwayed it, appreciating the speed, the safety of transportation. From the next exit on, until ultimate destination, we took "the low road." This was like old times. We slowed down for
