At Our House . . .

Father Speaks

By JOHN JAY DALY

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following was written without the knowledge of Mary Tinley Daly, regular author of "At Our House." When she and the Head of the House were ready to start on vacation it was a pleasant surprise to her to find she didn't have to write a column. "This week! But she would, huh. She knew the content of the 'guest column'."

"Mommie's tired, Daddy Needs a rest."
So said Markie after a meeting of the junior board of directors, adding: "We've decided you should write a substitute column for her."

"What shall I write about?"
"About six hundred words, Ginny piped up."

"Listen, ladies . . ."
"Dear Mary said, 'Daddy, don't back away. Last year you wrote a column — remember — about giving us this day our Daily bread!'"

THAT HAD been suggested by Johnny, our Number One boy. As a little fellow he believed his father should have been a baker instead of a newspaperman, bread wagon pre-planning the Daily product. Instead, news articles appeared daily and Sunday.

Certainly my mother is tired! I skinned. Why shouldn't she be worn-out. Look at all she does . . .

"She is many persons in one," said Eileen coming through the door from Bristol, Tennessee, bringing with her the little kitten, Mary Daly Brennan, 15 months — and Tony, Head of the House down "thataway."

That's (or sure) Pat said, following in Eileen's wake. "Our little mother is magnificent. No wonder she won the Magnificat Medal." Pat, too, had come on the family reunion along with her husband, Al Konnos, our architect.

Mommie was out touring the supermarket in quest of groceries. Her children, without knowing it, were helping write the substitute column — "At Our House," the real author, Mary Tinley Daly.

Batting ideas back and forth the tribe — with the help of Mommie who came along with his "idea," and under their thoughts about their mother. She is, said from that role about as good a cook as the culinary field ever developed, on a par with the great Scotter of Paris. Mention of this, along with some of her special talents, may rub herummy, Yummy!

MOMMIE is ALSO an Amateur one housekeeper, a seamstress — she has made all sorts of nice clothes — and a ducky woman for educational institutions like the Catholic University, Trinity College, Georgetown Visitation — a disciplinarian, helper with homework, a teacher of typing. She insists that each child, take the typing lessons, to read the lesson, eleven. Also, this little lady is a superviser, riding hard on the hired help, if any, and an editorial adviser per excellence.

Best of all though, she is the guardian of her family's health. Not long ago, meeting our family physician, the beloved Dr. Gilbert Rude, I said, "Let me thank you, doctor, for taking such good care of our family." He smiled, said: "Don't thank me, thank Mommie and Mrs. Daly, they're the best doctor I know in these parts!"

True. Ever since her first child — there are seven — she has offered a helping hand to mothers in the neighborhood, especially the novice. Mommie came by her healing powers some naturally. The Tinleys, her folks and in fact, Dr. Mary Tinley, got the knack by watching expert. So, we have a doctor in the house.

WE HAVE MORE than that at our house. We have a spiritual adviser, marriage counselor, teacher of virtues, coach of the afflicted, mother, wife, sweetheart, companion. In a word, we have the answer to the prayer of St. Francis of Assisi — an instrument of peace.

God bless Mary Tinley Daly, author of "At Our House," keeping her at the source of inspiration for years to come, in good health, so there need be no substitute columns, such as this. We want the original.

Among Women

Ingratitude

By MARY LENNON SNYDER

Ingratitude is surely one of man's least attractive attributes. In "As You Like It" a character sings that the cold blasts of the wintry wind are not less unkind than a friend who remembers not.

However, it sometimes seems to me that metaphorically we all too often expose ourselves to the wintry blasts of ingratitude when we look for appreciation of our good intentions and deeds.

If we could start with the premise that people accept gifts more easily than they express gratitude, we could save ourselves many a moment of disappointment and even of heartbreak.

In giving in any area of community or church good work, if we try our sights set high, if we give to God through these gifts to His creatures, we will not notice whether or not we are thanked. Thus, through unselfishness, we shall be less hurt and less hurt by the thoughtfulness or selfishness of others.

WE CAN NOT say that we will not in some measure be hurt, for few can attain the objectivity which would make them impervious to every hurt or slight.

It is wise to remember this when we have worked very hard and put so to speak, our hearts and souls into our efforts. We feel rebuffed when our good work goes unrewarded by gratitude and frequently it is apparently unappreciated by the very groups we feel hurt when they do not hear from priests and other missionaries whom they have aided.

The day of every priest and sister is so taken up that I am always delighted when I receive a letter from anyone in religion. This is especially true in the mission field where the daily routine of living is frequently complicated by lack of modern methods and by the dearth of time saving equipment.

ON MANY occasions I have sat with my fingers poised over my typewriter keys and the eyes of my imagination focused on some distant place as I tried to word a sentence to a priest or sister.

I wanted simply to say that while I would be delighted to hear from them, I actually did not expect them to answer my letter. That for me has always been a difficult message to convey truthfully.

Along the thought of expecting to hear from the objects of one's generosity, I return to my first statement. While we all like to receive an acknowledgment of, if not gratitude for, our generosity, I like to think that the words which our Lord spoke regarding fasting might be applicable here. Jesus advised that "thy Father who sees in secret will reward thee."
