The Weekly Note from Mr. Pops!

At no stage in history has there been more need for ideas — great scientific ideas, great philosophical thoughts, great sociological achievements.

Our college people are today "back at the old grind." By their association with the great thinkers of the past, with the great ideas of all times, by their association with their teachers whose task it is to make two ideas where only one grew before, they will develop their own new conceptions of human-ness and ideas.

They say a good idea is worth a million men marching off in the wrong direction. Who knows to what great heights some young person's idea may lead the world for generations to come?
