Another Barrymore

By EUPHEMIA WYATT

CURTAINS UP reveals that Ethel Colt, although she has been the Barrymore out of her name, has not lost the Barrymore charm. Her smile seems no superficial expression but an illumination from her inner self; her mother's rich speaking voice is now a singing voice of liquid tones and easy strength.

Miss Colt calls her one woman show "A Love Letter to the American Musical Theatre." She has chosen thirteen songs of different periods between 1787-1959 and sings them in costume as dramatic monologues. The most successful are a girl from the FLORADORA sextette; selections from Stephen Foster; TEA FOR TWO in 1920 and a Torch song of the '30's.

She is too sweet tempered to be successful in a musical comedy. Miss Colt excels as a singer but loves John Wallawitch at the piano makes it an important part of the show for which the decor is by Richard Nelson a young designer with a future.

POSESSION in a psychopathic sense is the taking over of a living person's body by an evil spirit and is recognized by the Catholic Church with a special rite of exorcism. In an Irish play, THE RIGHTeous ARE BOLD, which had a long run in Dublin as a priest, an exorcist, saves a young girl but dies himself. It failed in New York where few in the audience knew what "possession" meant but in Jewish folk lore the dybbuk — the spirit which steals another person's body — is well known.

In fact THE DYBBUK is the title of a Yiddish classic. In THE TENTH MAN, Paddy Chayevsky had a long run in New York which built a tradition on which to build a comedy drama which takes place in a dilapidated little synagogue in Lincoln, Long Island.

THE TENTH MAN, Paddy Chayevsky had a long run in New York which built a tradition on which to build a comedy drama which takes place in a dilapidated little synagogue in Lincoln, Long Island.

WHEN THE old man and the girl who is in a trance, agree to hide her in the rabbi's office until her grandfather can fetch an ancient rabbi from Williamsburg to exorcise her and while the grandfather is getting lost on the subway, the "tenth man" gets acquainted with the granddaughter as her normal self.

Directed by Tyrone Gularie, the grouping reminds one of an etching. It is a very orthodox synagogue and the prayer shawls the phylacteries on the forehead raised a little from the ground is unique as is the jellacy of the girl's beauty.
