The assistant pastor, Rev. George E. Gauthier, cousin of the bridegroom, performed the ceremony.

Several years since they had seen the inside of a church. He said the present standard of living required both parents to work and in most instances, the children suffer from lack of supervision if both parents are employees. Even though it is essential that both parents work in some cases, the children need not suffer from lack of training, he asserted. Children are too often given a free hand to do as they please, he continued. Pelts said there is a gradual change away from the belief that to restrain or show authority to a child will repress him and psychologists recognize the need for children to be taught respect for authority.
