

Thru The Looking Glass Fashion Show

By LOUISE WILSON

The string around your finger circle Jan. 28 on your calendar or take a fast memory course between now and then so that you won't miss the March of Brides Fashion Show, this evening at the Hotel Marquis Ballroom.

Mrs. Alfred Boylan, chairman of the fashion spectacular promises that the models will wear the latest in fashion, including the new "Bridal Shop" fashions from the Hotel Marquis. Handsome gentlemen, including Philip Morris, John McStravick, Robert Woolman and Frank Wood, will wear suits from the Tux Shop.

SHIRLEY PAGE, pictured, will wear a lovely bridal gown of silk-organza with embroidered lace and a full skirt. The gown is a new design by Shirley Page, who is wearing it in the "Bridal Shop" fashions from the Hotel Marquis.

Cocktail gowns will also be shown the evening of Jan. 28. The gowns will include a powder blue silk-organza with white lace, an elegant bow of satin centered with a blue satin rose.

A show-stopping formal will be shown in gold and white with a full skirt and a full train. The gown is a new design by Shirley Page, who is wearing it in the "Bridal Shop" fashions from the Hotel Marquis.

SUNDAY NOON, we attended a fabulous showing by the Millinery Institute of America when Edith Head, world famous fashion designer for motion pictures, served as commentator.

and presented the Golden AFTER THE FASHION show. The award is the best hat and presentation of awards, which went to Helena Rubinstein's public life.

Joan Crawford, wearing a gown in shocking pink organza, even in a jewel encrusted gown, and industry. Graceful and glamorous, she accepted with the briefest speech in her long career. This is the only time she visited I had two heads.

Cecile Holm and Betsy Palm all made pretty speeches and promised to continue to do light by the millinery industry. Everybody's out to get a hat on everybody's size. And that's the way it should be.

Talk It Over

Tickets and Dates

By ANNE CULKIN

Dear Miss Culklin:
Two weeks ago, a girl invited me to her Junior prom. She says there at school tell me I should not buy the ticket as it is not the thing to do. I'm so millionaires, but I don't want to tell them that I'm a cheap student. What do you think I should do? I'm so millionaires, but I don't want to tell them that I'm a cheap student. What do you think I should do?

Dear Susan:
If you feel the hamburger, movie or any entertainment must be paid for by a kiss, you're wrong. No, Susan, don't think a girl should make it a practice of allowing a boy to kiss her on their first date. Why? Because kisses should be special things for special people.

Don't cheapen them by using them too early and too freely. Save your kisses for real. Naturally I am assuming that you are referring to an affectionate kiss and not a simpering one. There is a difference. And if you are not certain of that important difference, I suggest that you ask your co-senior to explain it to you.

The fact that some movies and magazines feature the immoral kiss does not make that kiss which is sinful, not sinful.

If I have learned anything, Susan, from the hundreds of girls who have asked me this question before, it is that the boy usually tells the girl, "It doesn't mean anything." This is quite a weak argument, don't you think? But your reply can be strong if you answer him by saying, "Well, it doesn't mean anything, why do it?"

Dear Miss Culklin:
I have been dating a certain boy for over six months. We both like each other very much. Yet there is one thing that annoys me about him. It never seems to occur to him that he is supposed to open the car door for me. What do you think I should say to him?

Dear Alice:
If I were you, dear, I would not say anything to him in words before suggesting by an action that you think it is proper for him to open the car door for you. You would do this by simply not opening the car door yourself.

At Our House Superb Gift

By MARY TINLEY DALY

If your house is like mine, you have a special place reserved for the spiritual bouquets he stowed so lovingly over the years. Now, and then you go over them, reviewing these mementos of long past Mother's Days, Christmas, birthdays.

Some are dated far enough back to be labeled "Spruce Bokay" in childish scrawl, decorated with hand painted roses and flowers unknown to any botanist.

Goodness knows, we have appreciated every bouquet. Often times, we think that these prayers so generously offered for our welfare have been responsible for seeing us through otherwise impossible difficult situations.

BUT HAVE YOU ever watched a spiritual bouquet in the making? Recently, when we finally discovered the first spiritual bouquet, we realized the full impact of this expression of love. We glimpsed the behind-the-scenes aspect when cleaning a child's room, saw "For Mom's Birthday" printed on an index card and tucked into a mirror.

There was the flaking-down the length of the card: Masses, Communion, Visits, Sacrifices, Rosaries, Prayers, Ejaculations.

Two vertical lines followed the word "Masses," another two after "Communion." A few similar lines noted at the others.

The Head of the House and I had both received such a bouquet for Christmas. Now here was another started. The thought was touching, since my birthday is quite some time away.

During "pausing" days we have noticed many things: in the cold dark of these early mornings, we'd hear an alarm clock trill, hastily be shut off, hear sounds of stretching, yawning, sometimes an unbelieving "Oh, no, not already!" Then the soft click as the front door closes and a stealthy young figure nudges down the front steps and trots off to Mass. Boots make a clomping sound on rainy days, crunch against snow on cold mornings, like the postman. The sturdy figure goes through.

Day by day, the vertical pencil marks march across that index card as Masses and communions accumulate.

We note that occasional dashes are passed up with a yearning look and a "No thank you." We realize that each will mark another check-up, the word "Sacrifices." We notice, too, that often a rosary lies limply on the floor beside a bed in the morning - mute evidence that somebody has fallen asleep while praying. We remember the old belief that if you fall asleep while praying the rosary, the Blessed Mother will finish it for you. (All this co-operative effort for a birthday!)

Also, we've been noticing quiet moments, before and after studying, while table setting is going on, when young lips move in prayer. This accounts for the amazing number of "Ejaculations," the markings that have spread across the index card and stretched across the two lines - done up like balloons, in groups of four, with a diagonal line to make the fifth, for easy counting.

DAY BY DAY, weekly, the groups go on and on - each little line meaning that so much spiritual capital is being amassed. No passbook in a bank with interest deposits could even approximate the worth represented on that 3 x 5 inch index card. Total will be inscribed, eventually, onto a birthday card. It will be a "surprise" as all the others have been - a deeply treasured surprise, enshrined with its predecessors.

However, seeing such a precious gift developing before one's very eyes is the most touching and heartwarming aspect of the whole experience - even better than a grand surprise gesture.

Shamefacedly, I thought of my own hasty birthday gifts - sometimes bought on the very day, while the birthday cake cooled before being iced and decorated. No forethought - and certainly no sacrifice.

How long I wondered since I have made such a gift of sacrifice! Oh, I'd added my share to those of other parishioners and groups, contributing prayers and sacrifices toward amazing a spiritual bouquet for a favorite priest or teacher.

But, how long since I have made a personal, spiritual bouquet for one of my own children?
