

Our Daughter Is Dating A Delinquent. What Can We Do To Show Her Its Folly?

By FATHER JOHN L. THOMAS, S.J.
St. Louis University Sociology Professor

We're having serious trouble with our 17-year-old daughter. A few years ago she started going with a boy with a delinquent background. We broke it up then, but now she wants to go with him again, insisting she loves him and is old enough to pick her own friends. Her companions tell her that if she feels this way about him, she should go with him and that we have no right to interfere. We haven't given in, but how do you handle such a case?

I wish there were a simple, effective formula for dealing with such situations. Your problem isn't uncommon or without precedent in the past. The folklore and literature of every country includes accounts of adolescent love running into conflict with parental wishes.

Because we generally tend to overreact—underdog, we usually find ourselves pulling for the young lovers in these historical or fictional accounts, though we take a more realistic stand when the problem strikes nearer home.

There are several reasons why this particular type of conflict keeps coming up in every generation. Normal parents want their children to make good marriages, but parental views on this point may not coincide with those of their children. So it's parents unconsciously or otherwise, are really opposed to their children getting married at all and consequently bring up all sorts of objections to every choice their children may make.

On the other hand, because they lack experience and tend to take romantic view of marriage, young people may make decisions that will obviously lead to a life of unhappiness. Some of them see marriage primarily as a means of escaping parental control or of asserting their independence.

OTHERS FEEL confident that they can reform their partners, either because they alone understand them or because they flatter themselves that their partners need the special type of mothering they are prepared to give. Girls in love for the first time usually overestimate the amount of influence they have over their partners, as well as their own capacity to make sacrifices in their behalf.

A peculiar trait in some girls is their tendency to be fascinated by the unusual or the deviant. Although chastely themselves, they are captivated by boys who are well known to be promiscuous. Some seem to be drawn only to distinquished foreign types or members of an exploited group.

Others readily confer their affection on the rebellious, the delinquent, or the markedly irresponsible. Whether such girls are merely looking for a cause to defend or are nursing some type of martyr complex, they are not easily dissuaded from pursuing the destructive course to which they have chosen in the matter.

If you've read this far, you probably think I've forgotten your problem. On the contrary, I feel it will help you to deal with it effectively only if you set it in wider perspective. Your daughter claiming to love a boy with a background of delinquency.

Several years ago you broke up this affair, but she has persisted. Because her friends take the romantic view that love is all that counts, they side with her, thus further convincing her that she is being unfairly treated.

WHAT CAN you do? In the first place you are right in pledging her to associate with this boy. Under the circumstances your obligations as parents leave you no other choice. The boy has no religious faith and there seems nothing in his past record that would lead you to believe that he would make a responsible son-in-law.

However, you recognize that your real problem is how to help your daughter. In another year she will be eighteen and free to make her own decision in this matter. Can you save her from making a fatal choice? At the situation now stands, she'll probably try to "wear down" your opposition, and if this fails, she'll wait it out until she's of age and then have her own way.

It seems to me that you should make it clear once and for all that you are not going to alter your decision, forbidding her to associate with the entire audience.

No Dead Language

Latin Leads To Cardinalate

Vatican City — (NC) — Cardinals Designate Antonio Bacci, John XXIII, probably the world's greatest Latinist.

He has written in Latin more than 100 encyclicals for three popes. The 84-year-old Secretary of Briefs to Princes has worked over papal documents sometimes until dawn, putting them into elegant Latin before the sender and the receiver.

Help, he thinks, thoroughly the meaning of Christian marriage—its sacred, sacramental nature, its permanency, its parental obligations, and its social status giving character, binding her and her children to the position in society earned by her husband. Try to help her see that we can become attached to a person with whom we could never lead a happy life.

This won't be easy, but if through sympathy and understanding I can bring her to less defensive of her position, she may open eyes and take more realistic view of the situation before she comes of age.

Talks To Be

Translated

Munich — (RNS) — For the first time in Europe, a visual interpreting system will be used for delegates from all parts of the world attending the 37th International Eucharistic Congress here July 31-Aug. 7.

As speakers deliver their addresses, translations in the official languages of the Congress—German, English, French, Spanish, Italian and Portuguese—will be projected simultaneously on huge-screens visible to the entire audience.

Trujillo Turns Down Plea

Cludad Trujillo — (RNS) — In the present case of function, he was unable to ignore the Generalissimo Rafael Leonidas Trujillo Molina, dictator of the Dominican Republic, in a reply made public here rejected the plea for clemency for political prisoners made by six of the country's Roman Catholic bishops.

At the same time, he stated, the bishops' appeal was considered in a letter sent to the Generalissimo on Jan. 25, with a copy of a joint pastoral letter condemning "excesses" of his regime which the prelates said had brought grief to "so many homes in the country. The pastoral was issued in the wake of the jailing of thousands of Dominicans followed an alleged plot to assassinate General Trujillo.

The bishops' appeal was considered in a letter sent to the Generalissimo on Jan. 25, with a copy of a joint pastoral letter condemning "excesses" of his regime which the prelates said had brought grief to "so many homes in the country. The pastoral was issued in the wake of the jailing of thousands of Dominicans followed an alleged plot to assassinate General Trujillo.

As they did in their first pastoral letter, dated Jan. 31, the bishops stressed the need for charity and Christian love.

Two Doctors
Join Missions

Vienna — (RNS) — Two prominent Austrian doctors have answered a call sent out by the Physicians Guild, Catholic Action organization in the Vienna Roman Catholic archdiocese, for medical men to go to Africa as mission auxiliaries.

Their second pastoral, which was read in all the Catholic churches of the country, came after General Trujillo had replied to the first letter by stating that his respect for the laws of the country did not permit him to interfere in the administration of justice.

According to information received from 1,000 to 2,000 persons, many of them members of prominent families, have been called by the Trujillo government. Four trials have been held in which 123 persons have been sentenced to 30 years imprisonment. Meanwhile, only a negligible number of prisoners have been released.

Entitled "Out of This World," and filmed by special permission of the Vatican partly within the Carmelite enclosure, the movie was made by the British Broadcasting Corporation's Western Region Television Unit.

Nuns TV Film Wins Award

Monte Carlo — (RNS) — A TV film depicting life in a Welsh Carmelite convent was awarded first prize by the International Catholic Federation of Television, Radio and Films which held its third annual meeting here.
