Dear Liar

BY EUPHORIA WYATT

DEAR LIAR: The Correspondent who harried on between George states that neither Miss Cornell nor Shaw nor the self nor Mr. Ateneo seek to impersonate English actress. Mrs. Pat sonne the author of the letter. Mr. Campbell has now been informed and reads his with surprise by Jerome Miller and don't understand and at times I begin to read by Miss Katherine virulence pointing about Mr. Cornell and Mr. Brian Adams Shaw might have done on his own separate corners of the toes but Miss Cornell's native here. Then only join each other dignity and kindliness are as close centre to play a short while to the Spanish and she signs to her unpopularity with producers and her former never quite unvarnished. "I am a low life at play" is Stella and then again years later commands the stage. Shaw's romance. At the Billy Rose when her beauty was gone and her spirit debilitated. I also re-

I saw Miss Campbell once in a playwright of twenty-four had they were published in 1932 and now aligned himself to Greek was more struck by their dual genius and dared tell the re-silience than by their wives' turn of Agamemnon from the point of view of Orestes.

Shaw first wrote her in 1909 to ask her to appear in his CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA. Besides are on their way to the west. He was then trying to climb the dramatic ladder Only Electra still has faith in and she was at the top. Thirteen years later she did play Electra with her brother but it duly shocked that he has decided that that cult of his august father is founded on this myth of his greatness. Forty-seven. This was the peak of their romance which ended with a jolt when Mrs. Pat suddenly married a dashing young Captain, George Cornwall-West, who had been briefly Lady Randolph Churchill's second husband and Winston Churchill's stepfather.

SHAW NEVER FORGAVE his Stella's laps from loyalty and an acrimonious correspondence continued till her death about her right to publish his letters. She badly needed the money, the Shaw was rich by this time but he wrote her, "I could not love you, dear, hair so much, loved you not money more." Nor did he fall to give when Cornwall-West walked out on her.

Mrs. Pat made herself unhappy in Hollywood and died in cheap lodgings in France, until his and public opinion take willing to return to England because it meant leaving her Pekingese "Moonbeam" in quarantine.

The play is written in simple forceful English and is not only worth seeing but will be worth reading. High praise is due the entire cast. At the Downtown (4th Street, East of Second Avenue).

He is delighted when Agis thus suggests that he and Clytemnestra go and enjoy themselves in Athens and is coldly indifferent to Agamemnon's desperate plea that his son stand by him against the fatal plotting of Aegisthus and the Queen.

Orestes scoffs at the King's warning that destiny cannot be eluded. But just as his father had foretold, Orestes in Athens, finds himself trapped like Hamlet. The avenging of Agamemnon's death is closing in upon him and public opinion takes the place of visible Furies.

The play is written in simple forceful English and is not only worth seeing but will be worth reading. High praise is due the entire cast. At the Downtown (4th Street, East of Second Avenue).
