Another Language

By MARY TINLEY DALY

It's said that any two persons cast ashore on an island will, within 24 hours, evolve the basics of a common language. Small wonder then that families develop a lingo distinctly their own. This "family language" is fully comprehended only by members of the clan.

Recently a husband and wife had reached the parting of the ways. Called separately into Judge's chambers, the wife described her husband's actions as "whesbangic." The judge was nonplussed. Private interview with the husband revealed that the wife had been "whesbangic." "You two have me 'whesbangic,'" the judge said to the couple. "Now what's all this about?"

BOTH CONFESSED with rueful grins that they had been "whesbangic," their small son's name for naughty, barge-on-furniture. Case dismissed.

You and your husband/wife and children probably have verbal communication utterly incomprehensible to the outsider. Words and phrases creep into your subconscious, occasioned usually by some homely incident, a family joke, expressions used by young children, family folkies, and the like.

Goodness knows we have "Dalyese" jargon.

FOR INSTANCE, "googey" is in no dictionary, yet is part of our vocabulary, holdovers from Pat's early college for anything objectionable. Verbal of today most closely resembling it is "stinky." Openly, also her heritage. Quite casually, when speaking with one another, we say "Openam!" the door, the box, or whatever.

If anybody pulls a boner, we say, "It's a Mary's spaghetti!" spaghetti shortened to "spaghetti" meaning, "You didn't mean it. All's forgiven. Better luck next time." Based on fact, we remember that time after time Mary, bringing Italian spaghetti from kitchen to dining room had an uncanny knack of tipping the plate away from her and landing the whole mess on the dining room rug. "Spaghetti" is for us to visual image of an unintentional bad mistake.

Off The Record

Dad-Burn Funny

By SUZANNE WIGG

Homer and Jehro have gone from baggy breeches to dinner jackets in their new album called "Homer and Jehro At The Country Club" on RCA Victor. It's the same old take-off type of humor, however, and if you like a good parody, you'll find lots of humor in this album. Actually it's a collection of several of their best singles of the past few years with a few new ones added.

The success of Homer and Jehro is attributed to their particular knack of hoking a very popular song with a combination of hill-billy and western twang and of course their own lyrics. Some of the gems on the album are: "Let Me Go, Blubber," "Don't Let The Stars Get In Your Eyes," "Faller Rose Of Texas," "You-All," "Lullaby Of Bird Dog" and several others.

BUDDY GRECO, one of the finest singers in the business has recorded a dandy album for Epic. Buddy has a delicate approach to a song and his phrasing is a thing of beauty. It is obvious from the start that Buddy is not only a singer but a very fine musician and this fact shows up in every tune.

The album was cut at the night club "Le Bistrot" in Chicago and Buddy is backed up by a real snappy rhythm section. Some of the tunes in the collection are "The Lady Is A Tramp," "Like Young," "Misty," "Just In Time," "I Laughed At Love," and "How About You."

HERE'S AN album which should be good for something. It's called "Tava And Country Square Dance" and was recorded in Nashville by some of the town's finest musicians (it says). Well anyway here are twelve hand-clapping, toe-tapping, finger-snapping tunes which have stood the test of time over the years. This music is pure country and it is also a reminder of how much fun a good old fashioned square dance can be. (Everest)

A REAL different sound to come along is contained in an album called "Brass And Bamboo" and recorded on Capitol. The arrangements are by Tak Shindo who has blended the music of the east and west. It is the big band dance arrangements spiced with exotic instrumental sounds of the Orient. Shindo offers a brand new concept in music, combining the exotic sounds of ancient Japanese instruments with modern big band orchestrations, in tempo and mood to swing. The music is different and exciting, full of thrilling effects. Hats off to Tak Shindo, a thinking musician.

Cadet School Lists Concert

Nazareth Hall Cadet School will present a concert Sunday, May 1, in their dress uniforms. Included in the program are selections by the school band, the Junior Glee Club, the senior Glee Club and a solo of Trina Schubert's "Ave Maria" by Peter Perreman on his clarinet.
