Twelfth Night

By EUPHORIA WYATT

TWELFTH NIGHT: — Facing the confluence of the Housatonic River with the Long Island Sound, The American Shakespeare Festival Theatre with its tall pines, dull grey timbers and red geraniums, says a visit more than ever now that Mr. Ter-Artanian, the designer, has replaced the dreary Venetian blinds which once boxed in the whole stage with a daintily bizarre background of sea shells — presumably oyster — scattered over a scrim through which a golden light filters with an effect that is soothng and lovely. On one side of the stage is the round pavilion which serves the Duke Orsino; on the other a delicate wrought gilded ironwork portico, to the Lady Olivia's villa.

Instead of the fabled Myrra, the place is now some nineteenth century watering resort where the Duke is in charge of the naval station. This gives Viola opportunity to wear a very smart blue jacketed uniform and for once, she and her brother, Sebastian, now a midshipman are really twins.

This Sebastian, whose name is Clayton Corzette, also contrives to impress himself on the audience as an unusual young man. Setting the comedy so far forward in time, makes less difference than one would suppose, although the romance may seem less poetical when spoken by Orsino and Viola in white duck trousers.

Fortunately the round black sailor hat is very becoming to Miss Katherine Hepburn. Malvolio, well played by Richard Waring, still wears black knee breeches & chamberlain's Feste, the Fool, is now an old man in faded motley, given fine aptitude by Carnovsky, Margaret Phillips is more intelligent than availing as Olivia; she and her ladies in billowy muslins, hide their faces from Cesario behind black lace parasols.

Loring Smith's genial Sir Toby looks like a boisterous Mr. Pickwick and Sir Andrew Ague-cheek is a Peter Piper with fishing tackle. Two little red and white bathing houses on wheels serve as concealment for Maria and Sir Toby from Malvolio and one also becomes his prison. Sada Thompson is very incarnation of comedy and her dimpling laugh makes her a peerless Maria, but Donald Davis, young as he is, seems over-porphy for Viola's dream prince. Hepburn's gay sense of comedy, the freneticism of comedy, the freshness of Viola and while the forces heartily the duel scene, it is pony play not horse play. After the baroque beauty of the Old Vic TWELFTH NIGHT, Jack Landau's sessile version proves the adaptability of William Shakespeare and the light-heartedness of his humor.

ERNEST IN LOVE: — A most agreeable evening of melodious sophistication and nineteenth century wit is offered in this miniature musical in which the epigrams of Oscar Wilde have been set to music and the romantic adventures of John and Algernon as set forth in THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING ERNEST are shown in the accompaniment of a charming orchestra of piano, bass, asoon, clarinet and flute, the attractive cast both speak and sing with distinction, the sets and costumes have style and altogether it is one of the best summer bargains. Has just moved to the Cherry Lane (Commerce St.).

Available recreational facilities include an 80 foot swimming pool, tennis courts, ball diamond, table tennis, volleyball and basketball courts.

A balanced instrumentation for both band and orchestra is maintained. Students are accepted on the basis of ability or potential on each instrument until the section is filled. There are a limited number of openings available.

Dorothy Bradley, director, and Robert Wadsworth, camp manager, invite the public to attend these concerts held Sundays at 7 p.m. in the natural amphitheatre at the camp. Turn east off 15A six miles south of Lima.
