Watching The Screen

Glad Game

By RAY SMITH
The magic name of Walt Disney brings Eleanor Porter's old-fashioned novel to life again for a new generation of youngsters and for the nostalgic pleasure of many of their elders in the thoroughly delightful "POLLYANNA" at the Palace Theatre for the "WHOLE FAMILY." If the family happens to be on vacation this week, don't worry. Such wonderful entertainment MUST be held over for at least a second week.

Reverend Ford, a fire-and-brimstone preacher, who turns to the "glad" passages of the Bible for his sermons, and eventually Aunt Polly herself.

THE LEISURELY story centers around the building of a new orphanage, to which Aunt Polly is opposed, and the rallying of the now rebellious community in a big fund-raising bazaar. This affair with its multicolored attractions and its band of elder citizens blaring out rhythmic music of the day is one of the film's highlights.

In 1912 an orphan named Pollyanna comes to live with her aunt in a glum little town completely dominated by this rich, iron-willed lady. Taught by her missionary father to play the "glad game"—to see only the good in people and situations—Pollyanna throws out the discontented resentful townfolk of Harrington, getting notable results with a disagreeable old hermit, a hypochondriac Mrs. Snow, who gets out of her "death bed" and once more finds joy in living, the Hayley Mills is the young star who makes Pollyanna credible and this the successful "family picture" it is. She conveys a child's candor without resort to either old-fashioned sentimentality or modern brashness. With this performance, Hayley seems headed toward a great career. Rarely have the attitudes and mannerisms of a child been reflected so expertly on the screen, certainly to the credit of writer-director David Swift. A cast consisting largely of veterans has been assembled for this 135 minute picture: Jane Bryan, who is excellent in her role, Kaye Madden, the enjoyable Adolphe Menjou, and the young veteran Kevin Corcoran. Yet even these troupers are completely overshadowed by the excellence of Hayley Mills.

Organ Revamped At St. Michael's

The soaring arches of majestic St. Michael's Church, Rochester, echo with the music of a revamped organ originally built in 1865. More than 2,000 pipes have been replaced, a new console and electronic controls installed and the chimneys returned. The organ case has been refinished. The Steere-built organ was repaired by the Tilden Co. of Erie at a total cost of $12,000. Organmaster at St. Michael's for nearly half a century was the late Frederick Pohl, widely known for his mastery of the great organ. Present organist, at console in photo, is Mrs. Lillian Karns.

This is our chance. Let's all get out of our overstuffed chairs and show Hollywood what we think about such wonderful entertainment by taking everybody in the household to see "Pollyanna" at the Palace Theatre. The second feature is also in the A-1 category. One word of warning. You better bring an extra handkerchief with you. Anyone who could see this beautiful story without sniffing and wiping away the tears should see it twice.

A free-wheeling comedy for ADULTS AND ADOLESCENTS comes to the Loew's Theatre this week with Judy Holiday and Dean Martin in "BELLS ARE RINGING." The comedy and music are very good. More about this next week as it will be held over for a second week.

THE GIPSY, being of a wrong nature, using instruments which are portable and easily carried by gypsies, and the constant and tampered instruments provide the gypsy who doesn't play is rare and most of them are true artists. Some of the instruments are antique, having been handed down from father to son for centuries.
