DOUBLE CLASSES EYED, TWO THIRDS TURNED AWAY
Cleveland — (RNS) — Catholic high schools in the Diocese of Cleveland may turn to double sessions next year in an attempt to meet the growing demand for their services.

The prediction was made by several parochial elementary school superintendents who are also directors of high schools and other methods of coping with the 38 diocesan high schools, problems now under study by the diocese. The schools are unable to accept only one-third of the students who apply for enrollment in the high schools because of the high cost of construction and the reduction of the high school class.

Double sessions, he said, would be "almost a certainty" during the 1961-62 school term.
