

Talk It Over

Part-time Jobs

By ANNE CULKIN

Dear Miss Culklin:
What do you think of high school students taking part-time jobs? I never had one but I am thinking of getting one.

Dear Jack:
It is difficult to answer your question directly without knowing why you are now interested in securing a part-time job in general, high school educators, while recognizing certain exceptions, oppose the part-time student job. If you wish to answer the questions listed below you will understand the feelings of these educators and very possibly, obtain the guidance that you seek.

1. Are you attending a technical school in which part-time work is part of the training program? (One takes it this is not so but just in case—)

2. Must you hold a part-time job to assist your parents in financing your education? Or are you actually interested in working to secure a car, more spending money or some other non-essential?

3. Will this job interfere with adequate, well-prepared arrangements? What about library projects?

4. Will your working mean pushing your school preparation into the late night hours? What about eight hours of sleep? Will this in turn mean doing through classes?

5. Will a part-time job prevent you from participation in school activities in which many of your classmates are interested? Will your failure to join them cause resentment?

Dear J:
Unless a watch is of a very dressy variety, it is better not to wear it with a formal dress.

Dear Miss Culklin:
Isn't it wrong when there are about six people talking and two start whispering to each other? I have a friend who says it is all right if there are a lot of people, but it would be wrong if there were only two or three people in the room. I don't agree. What do you say?

Dear G. W.:
I say you are right. In a small social gathering people can't automatically ignore the whole company by carrying on a whispered conversation. Whatever may actually be the nature of these confidences, some present will suspect that it is they themselves who are being discussed. Even when this is not the case, whispering suggests that intimate friends have secrets to exchange that can't be shared with the other guests. If anything will discourage a general conversation, this will do it.

As a matter of fact, whispering is apt to be rude in most, if not all, situations.

Dear Miss Culklin:
What do you do with people who come to the home sneaking the good name of others and then going smooching around them? Not too long ago a person like this came to my home. I upheld the one that she was sneaking because there is not a finer person than she. Now the other one is going around sneaking me. She ought to be ashamed of herself. Every Sunday morning she goes to Communion. (She all but breaks a leg to get to the rail.) I have been told by people who know the whole family that they are all troublemakers and gabby.

Dear Bea:
We know that if a person is not in the state of grace and receives Holy Communion, that person commits a serious offense against God. We also know that if we destroy the character of another, we are not in the state of grace. But, and this is an important but no person, with the exception of a priest in the confessional, has the right to pass judgment on the worthiness of another person to receive Holy Communion.

I can appreciate, Bea, your concern regarding your own good name, for who is the person of character who doesn't consider it a priceless possession? It is recommended, however, that when we become a victim of malicious gossip, we remember the necessity of prayer. We pray for the grace that will enable us to be moved to sympathy, not to anger, for the person who is attempting to destroy our reputation. For human nature being what it is, we know that it is only with God's help that we can ever react accordingly.

Dear Miss Culklin:
What is so wrong about holding hands?

Dear Anderson:
Who said it was wrong. Anderson.
