It would be nice if I could set myself up as a parigon of truthfulness. But in all humility I must confess that I have been guilty of stretching the truth because I could not bring myself to be so cruel as to tell, in this instance, the absolute, brutal truth. I was approached by a rather large, unattractive, middle-aged women who had a problem. She was looking for a husband, and this, believe me, was a real problem. To her every season was open season on men. Her question, "Why can't I find a husband?"
